PUBLISHED DAILY AND WEEKLY BY S. RIDDLE & CO., FIFTH STREET, ABOVE SMITHFIELD. PITTSBURGH: FRIDAY MORNING, MAY 10.

IMPORTANT FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, May 7, 1861.

No More Provisions to the South.

Secretary Chase received several letters from Cincinnati merchants, to-day, protesting against cities on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers sending provisions south, while Cincinnati was restricted from doing so. They ask for fair play. Secretary Chase replies, that he has anticipated their letters, as he gave orders five days ago to the collectors on those rivers that no provisions must be allowed to go south. Gov. Yates was telegraphed to-day, requesting that all provisions going south through Camp Cairo should be stopped, as some were passing through under a conditional arrangement made with the commander there.

The Movement at the South.

There can be little doubt that General Beauregard is now in Richmond. The tone of the southern press and the reports of travelers from the same region, agree that the sense of military operations on the part of the south is to be removed to the border states, and Beauregard is undoubtedly planning the campaign.

There is a two-fold object in this movement. It is necessary to remove the military preparations and the opportunities for a collision from the interior of the gulf states to get rid of the incentives to negro insurrection; while a border warfare will be inaugurated for the purpose of dragging the remaining border states into the rebellion.

Another point which I have obtained from a southern source, and which confirms the foregoing, is, that before the adjournment of the Montgomery Congress it will decide to make Richmond, Va., the capital of the Confederate States.—N. Y. World.

From Virginia.

The concentration of Virginia troops at Alexandria, mentioned in last night's dispatch, is confirmed, and is in exact accordance with Governor Letcher's recent proclamation recommending the gathering at that point of the militia from several counties. They still, however, seem to have no specific object in view, and must retire soon as they have exhausted what provisions they brought with them, and supplies cannot be had at the place of rendezvous. Their numbers are variously stated at from 3,000 to 15,000—the balance of testimony and probability favoring the accuracy of the lowest number.

The Montgomery troops referred to last night had only got as far as Richmond. Government is advised that they were ordered to march northward, through Richmond, but whether they are to go to Alexandria or to Harper's Ferry is unknown. They number about two thousand, and constitute the first installment of the army of eighteen thousand mentioned by Jefferson Davis in his recent message.

The Southern Army.

A highly respectable and well-known citizen of New York, arrived to-day from New Orleans, after spending several weeks in the South, asserts, with much earnestness and sincere concern, that we are all living here in a state of false security—that an army of a 100,000 men is pushing its way hither by railroad rapidly. They expect to capture this city before next Saturday, and will give no quarter, but put every man, woman and child to the sword. He adds that he has seen this army, been in and among it, and heard constantly its fearful imprecations upon those who adhere to the Union. The character of this gentleman is a sufficient voucher for the honesty of his intentions in making these statements, but there need be no doubt of the fact that his imagination has been seriously wrought upon, and the strength of the Southern forces magnified in his mind by the constant assertions of those by whom he was surrounded.

When he made his statement to Gen. Scott, the old hero said there was no doubt there was an army, but instead of counting it as a hundred thousand men, he would say it numbered but ten or fifteen thousand.

Mr. Seward inquired of the informant whether he saw anything of the Commissariat of this Southern army; to which the gentleman replied in the negative. The Secretary rejoined that if the Disunionists found as much trouble in moving troops without a Commissariat as the Government does with one, it would take rather longer than until Saturday next to get a hundred thousand men here.

Our good friends North will please not be alarmed for our personal safety just yet.

Baltimore.

The Post Office Department will make an effort, to-morrow, to establish a regular daily mail from Washington to Philadelphia, through Baltimore. A committee of gentlemen from that city have been here urging the Postmaster General to do this. They say they have sufficient to a great extent, owing to the isolated condition of the city, by the loss of their mail facilities and commerce. Another committee of Union men, besides that of the Legislature, which came on to see the President, arrived to day, to urge him not to send troops through Baltimore at present, as they feared a riot, and that the vengeance of the Secessionists would be visited upon them. As the President was very busy with Gen. Scott and the Secretary of War, they did not see him. They will remain over night and attempt to get an interview to-morrow. It will have no effect.

From Harper's Ferry.

A gentleman, who has been three weeks at Harper's Ferry, has arrived, and says there are three thousand Virginians there, six hundred without arms, and six hundred poorly armed. There are four companies of well drilled cavalry, but the remainder are grumbling at the severity of the discipline and the want of provisions. Hence that only four hundred muskets were saved from the Arsenal. The people are suffering for want of flour and food. There is no labor, except in making rifles by the armorers. The forms are robbed of what provisions were stored. At present the Virginians are considering whether they will cross the Potomac and occupy the Heights in Maryland. It is believed they will not, but will probably move down the valley to Charlestown.

Instructions to the Foreign Ministers

Secretary Seward's letter of instructions to Mr. Dayton, Minister to France, has excited much interest here, and is universally commended as a dignified, statesmanlike document, worthy of the occasion, and placing the position of its author upon the great questions of the day above and beyond suspicion. The Secretary's letter to Mr. Adams, Minister to England, on the same subject, I learn from a competent source, is more elaborate—considering the secession question more in detail—and is even abler than that to Mr. Dayton. It is hoped Mr. Seward and the Executive will promptly yield to the general desire for its publication, as a means of satisfying the public mind that the spirit of the hour. Possibly the document may go forward to-night, in time for publication to-morrow.—N. Y. Times.

Virginia Half-Conquered Already.

The effects of secession upon the Virginia towns continue to be most disastrous. A majority of the leading merchants of Alexandria have refused to renew their licenses according to the dictates of the Convention, or, in other words, have abandoned their business. A large banking house there which has survived all the troubles of former years, has at last died of secession, and its suspension is felt severely.

Since Saturday last eight slaves have escaped from the city, and as Virginia has released all the Northern States from the obligations growing out of their federal relations with her, she expects no benefit from the fugitive slave law.

The only foreign vessel in the port attempted to leave with a cargo, but was brought to anchor under the guns of Fort Washington, and not allowed to proceed. A large number of families have also left Alexandria on account of the rumored occupation of the town by federal troops.—N. Y. World

Terrible Times in the Cotton States.

Occasional travelers from Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, and South Carolina, bring information that there is a fearful condition of things financially, socially and politically, in that quarter. Every effort is made to conceal the fact, but bankruptcy and beggary are inevitable.

Forming Public Opinion.

It is understood that the troops in the possession army shall exercise the right of suffrage. Jeff Davis, nervously anxious to push Virginia out of the Union, and frightened at the strong Union feeling in the western part of that State, is pouring into the Old Dominion hordes of soldiers from the Cotton States, and from Tennessee, North Carolina and Kentucky. The game of attacking the capital has been abandoned for the present, and the Southern army is to be used to overwhelm the Union sentiment of Virginia.—Phila. Press.

Gen. Butler and a Baltimore Committee.

A committee of the Union men from Baltimore visited the Maryland Legislature to-day, to protest against the public safety bill there pending. On their return they stopped at the Relay House and called on General Butler, and had a pleasant interview. The General said that like them he was opposed to Mr. Lincoln and the Republican party in politics, but that had nothing to do with the present crisis. The Union must be maintained, and the Government upheld until any soldier in the country could walk anywhere in any State with perfect safety under the protection of the American flag. This would first be done, and afterwards politics could be discussed.

The government, it is said, has already received proffers of service from two hundred and fifty thousand men, all west of the Alleghenies.
