MONDAY MORNING, MAY 27, 1861.

THE UNION, in its present glorious condition, is glorious. It is a great victory indeed, and will save the State. In the East, there was but little freedom or奴役, and of course the sacrifice is not too popular. The reader may be enabled to judge what kind of liberty is allowed by the Southern leaders in that State, we leave the following from a letter of Senator Mason, published in the "Daily Commonwealth," Boston:

"What are these to do, who in their conscience cannot vote to separate Virginia from the United States—the master is simple and plain—right and wrong—no room for doubt or question. If they refuse such a dissolution, they must leave the States."

The armies of the United States have entered upon the territory of that State; but do they go as conquerors? Certainly not, but as deliverers. Virginia was conquered when that rebellion, composed of slaveholders, got into power there; and it is now conquered again, when the armies of the Union go to restore the people to the independence of which they have been deprived by that tyrant who are as much the enemies of the State as of the nation. One of the high duties of the general government is to guarantee to each State a form of government; but is the principle expressed in the above extract republican, either in form or in spirit?

Virginia has been engaged in a fierce battle-ground in her own contest, and is well fit for our Northern troops to spend the summer as in that State as in Pennsylvania. There are conflicting statements as to the number of secession troops. In the State—some account placing it as high as thirty thousand, others as low as twenty-three to twenty-five thousand. The largest aggregation, we think, is at Harper's Ferry and their vicinity.

This is the second time in the course of the campaign that she has opened, for before that battle, when the eye of the reader, the soldier may bring in news that will gladden-purchase golden suns. Let us all labor to do our duty faithfully, and leave results with Him who knows how much chancery we need.

Cheering for the Soldiers.

We reader will find a card in this paper signed F. Frenschfeld & Bro., asking a suspension of judgment in regard to some clothing furnished by them for the use of volunteers in the service of the State. This is a very unusual case, as it goes to show that these garments are expensive, the clothing business, and to furnish the uniforms were but purveying their legitimate calling. It will be natural that it is not against regular tradesmen, but against a set of rapacious and swindling middlemen, who too often get the management of such contracts, that the people's indignation is aroused.

The Philadelphia papers have given no account of the conflict, existing between these two sets of men, but we are told that the uniforms were but purveying their legitimate calling. It will be natural that it is not against regular tradesmen, but against a set of rapacious and swindling middlemen, who too often get the management of such contracts, that the people's indignation is aroused.

It is idle to suppose that the name of the campagna, which has just opened, for before that battle, when the eye of the reader, the soldier may bring in news that will gladden-purchase golden suns. Let us all labor to do our duty faithfully, and leave results with Him who knows how much chancery we need.

The charge which has been brought in the public notice of Maryland gives us a foretaste of the young South which we expect to see rise from the ruins of the hideous form of secession. To the eye, at present, the South seems to be a fiery furnace, filled with demons, who breathe out nothing but curses and malice. The same fierce unanimity in favor of the traitors and their masters, as was manifested in the ranks of Paris during the revolution forty years ago. But no sooner was the tyranny overthrown, than immediately it was ascertained that the tyrants and their masters were irreconcilably hated by the people who, in their helplessness, were made to sustain them.

Let the Government show itself to be more powerful than the rebels, and we shall soon find that an overwhelming majority of the Southern people hate the tyranny which rules them with the rod of iron, and that they will rejoice to see it overthrown.

The Government has the right on its side, and it is only necessary to show that it has the power to secure the safety of the people in the Southern States. The South, as far as we can see, is in a state of revolution, and it will not be long before it is in a state of insurrection.
