

THURSDAY MORNING, MAY 20, 1863.
New Orleans, which city it was obliged to leave in consequence of the Union sentiment and sympathies, falls the Buffalo "Express" from remarkable stories of his hazardous life, on which he started on May 10th, 1863.
Mr. McQueen reports that while on the march, he was filled with soldiers, and all the railroads seemed busy in the transportation of troops and munitions. The train on which he left New Orleans, was an enormous one, and bore 1,500 troops, bound for Lynchburg, Va. The band of music, "The 100th," on the same point, were taken on board at Lynchburg, Va. He saw a large encampment of soldiers, and about 1,000 at Chambers, Miss.; another of 3,000 at Vicksburg; another of about the same force, at Grand Junction, Miss. A large one at Holly Springs, Miss. The force of which he did not learn. At Jackson, on Monday morning, he saw the formidable "Iron Brigade," who were just leaving for Charleston, according to great parade.
At New Orleans Mr. McQueen represents the condition of the city, that the thousands of Union men in the city, but they are nervous and under complete subjection. He says that at Holly Springs, Miss., the most unshaken. On every position Northern men are arrested and sentenced to some "penitentiary" in the city. Every man who is arrested is taken to the "penitentiary," accompanied by recruiting officers, and after the prisoners are taken to the "penitentiary," they will be taken to the Confederate Army. Those who resist this solicitation are taken to the "penitentiary," and a squad designated the "Workshop Guards," that means being marked upon their uniforms, and sent to the "penitentiary."
