LETTER FROM WASHINGTON.

From Our Own Correspondent.
WASHINGTON, May 31, 1861.

Men may speculate as they please; "energetic" reporters may telegraph as much as they can afford, but I assure you, the world outside knows only as much about the great movements now maturing, as Gen. Scott and the administration please to have them; they know just as much and no more. The ambition to seem to know more is the source of immense evil to the community. Reports so baseless as the fabric of a vision get a thousand tales, while truth is getting equipped for the start.

I learn from a gentleman who conversed with a member of the cabinet last night, that an important movement will be made perhaps this week. It is supposed that this refers to a movement on Manassas Junction. A map will show you that this alone remains to shut up Harper's Ferry. The people's the other side of the Potomac are at last beginning to discover that Lincoln means fight, and they do not like the appearance of the 50,000 men now here and in Virginia. The "sacred soil" is at length dug, ditched, and plowed by the Federal troops as it was of no more value than so much Pennsylvania dirt.

The scouts of the two armies are getting close to each other. Fires were exchanged on Thursday between the secession patriots and those of the loyal army, about five miles back of Georgetown. In civilized warfare pickets usually abstain from the savage practice of slaying the enemy "on sight." Who does not remember the night in the Peninsular war of French and English pickets and videttes coming down to the opposite sides of the same brook—the dividing line of the rebellious armies—and exchanging civilities and drinking to each other's health? But this "secession movement," having begun in treachery and theft, is sustained only by plunder and carried on by assassination. Its every step is tracked with blood, of the innocent. There is no doubt that's movement on the Potomac is intended soon. This is the only salvation for the Harper's Ferry folk. They must be rescued. The 5th Pennsylvania Regiment went to Arlington to-day in the above cities, subject to the decision of the Republican Convention. ap8:td

HIGHLY IMPORTANT NEWS.

WASHINGTON CITY, June 1, 1861.

The Campaign in Virginia.

The Rebel Congress will never meet in Richmond. It is the fixed determination of the government to have a blowsish of that band of scoundrels before the 4th of July. No less than ninety thousand freemen of the North, strong with the consciousness of fighting the right cause, and amply provided with all the requisites for successful warfare, will be moving towards the capital of the ill-fated Old Dominion in less than two weeks, and sweep the last vestige of treason from this side of James river, so the people of the loyal States will have in celebrating the national anniversary. Of the ninety thousand, thirty-five thousand will push onward from this point towards the Blue Ridge, to meet the rebels in battle, should they attempt to dispute their advance, and out of the retreat of their secession forces at Harper's Ferry. Twenty thousand will invade Virginia still under Gen. Patterson, from southeastern Pennsylvania. Twenty thousand, under Gen. McClellan, will cut their way towards Winchester and Strasburg; and fifteen thousand, under General Butler, aided by a naval force, will gradually make their way up James river.

General McClellan will not trace the windings of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad after concentrating his forces at Grafton, but will follow the turnpike from that point to Winchester. A strong force will be collected in Western Virginia, in addition to the corps d'armee of General Sherman, for the protection of the Unionists in that section and directions towards the southwestern portion of the State.

The control of the railroad extending from Richmond via Lynchburg, across Southern Virginia, through Tennessee, is said to be one of the main points of General Scott's plan for the summer campaign. With its possession, and the occupation of Memphis, secession in Tennessee will soon be crushed out.

From Fortress Monroe.

Slaves were still flocking to the fort. It was discovered that thirty of the slaves belonged to one man in Richmond. He obtained permission to visit the fort to confer with Gen. Butler on the subject of getting his live property back. He asked the General if he might be allowed to convey them back. The General kindly said they came there of their own accord, and could go back with him if they desired to. They were asked if they desired to return with their master. They quickly decided that they preferred to remain with the soldiers in the fort. The claimant then said if the General would allow him to take his slaves to Richmond he would manumit them. Gen. Butler said he could not make any such arrangement. He, the claimant, could go to Richmond with the slaves, and they could stay, as they pleased, and if they went the claimant might do as he pleased about manumitting them. In short, Gen. Butler refused to agree to anything but that niggers and master might leave the fort as they pleased. The claimant, finding himself in a bad fix, manumitted the thirty slaves on the spot, left them in the fort free men, and left himself for Richmond.

The Constitution of the People of Virginia.—A citizen of Virginia, of high position, and a graduate of West Point, arrived in the city to-day, having been driven from his residence near the North Carolina line. His account of the condition of the people is melancholy. The utmost alarm and insecurity prevail. He was ordered to leave, and was only permitted to depart without personal violence by the interposition of friends who are rebels. He expresses the utmost confidence of returning in six months with the power of the Government at his back. He is especially urgent for the capture of Richmond, which he states is the store-house of supply for a large portion of the Southern country. Three flouring mills there are constantly grinding out 3,000 barrels of flour daily, the [illegible] goes to feed treason. There are thousands, according to his opinion, who only await to see Federal bayonets and hear the Federal Flag, to return to their constitutional obligations.

Affairs in Baltimore.

The two large columbiads, lately shipped from Pittsburgh to Fort McHenry, were upheld by the Secessionists in the streets of Baltimore, and it was not discovered until they had been mounted in the Fort.

A party of rowdies last Baltimore last night to go to Federal Hill and kill some of the picket guard there, but in place of killing them, the guard shot three, and the rest fled.

Fifty Knights of the Golden Circle and a Lieutenant, who have been stationed at Harper's Ferry, arrived yesterday in Baltimore, and made arrangements for a grand secret plot to again take possession of Baltimore. That city has been utterly demoralized since Gen. Cadwalader has had possession of it, and where there were forty Union flags flying when he entered, there is not one now.

Judge Taney Beleaguered.

Judge Taney has finally subsided, after, for the third time, endeavoring to destroy the Government. He has again attempts to impede the progress of the Administration, in its efforts to sustain the Constitution and the laws; he will certainly be impeached; but if he is content to be a law-abiding citizen, he will be permitted to totter into the grave without being officially branded as a traitor.

Newport News Point.

The origination of the name of this Point, lately made notorious by the advance of Gen. Butler's forces, is thus explained:

"The early colony on James River was at one time reduced to a straitened condition, and some of its members started down the James River, with the intention of proceeding to England. They reached the head of the river, which is at present an object of interest, and paused for some days. When they were about to sail, they saw a ship coming up the River, bearing the British ensign. They delayed till it should arrive. It proved to be Lord Newport's ship, with his Lordship on board, who brought the intelligence that the ship which the colony had long before despatched to England for supplies, and which was many months overdue, was near at hand, bringing much needed relief. Meantime, his Lordship distributed provisions among the colonists, who, from these circumstances, named the place "Newport's News," on account of the good tidings which his Lordship brought to them."
