

MONDAY MORNING, JUNE 16.

"The Times of Pictures Unseen."

The following paragraph is from Mr. May's able letter in the London "Times" on "The Causes of the American Civil War."

"It is strange that Englishmen should find difficulty in understanding that the United States government is a national government, and that the constituted authorities which may be overthrown by violence, as may be the fate of any state, whether kingdom or republic, but which is false to the people if it does not stand, even at the cost of blood. The United States happens to be a plural entity, but the commonwealth thus designated is a unit. A fraction of the nation in the family of nations; the Union above holds the parts and the world, regulating foreign intercourse, imposes taxes on foreign commerce, and has the right to tax its own citizens, the nation, the militia belong to the Union alone, and the President is Commander-in-Chief of all. No state can keep troops or fleets, and no state in the civilized world can in England carry the name of all the individual states! And yet, with hardly a spiritual emanation of one authority, it has become a confederacy, a compact, and a confederacy, a compact, and the right of a state to secede at pleasure, not knowing that by abandoning such a course they would immediately become the slaves of their former masters. The political organization should be the apex of our history—should trample entire under the teachings of James, Franklin, Washington, Marshall, Madison, Dana, and Webster, and should be the truest and deepest source of Mt. Calvary as infallible, summarizing over our national laws and national ascendancy."

The Axe in the Slave State.

One of the last of those funny publications which still manage to keep alive in the Rebel States bravely informs us, that "the master of Washington feels well upon Jefferson Davis." The writer of this, I think, made a very extraordinary use of the words of George Washington, when he said, "The axe of Usurpation is in the hands of a pugil."

The axe of Hypocrite and Tyrant! All these are ridiculous in the extreme, and the author of such an article deserves to be exposed to the public gaze.
