Four such appointments might well beget alittle chartity for that of Bohenck, who has learned a leason bitter enough at the start, to make him a good Georial hereafter.

Nor must the country forget that a great army of 225,000 men cannot be got together in a sountry without a standing army, and in the abort appec of two months, without taking a consideration by which a large number of the officers of our little army resigned at the beginning of the outbreak and went over to the enemy. The foountry, we know, is impatient to see this war pushed on vigorously to the end; but in its imputnosity it must not overlook the difficulties which surrounded the Government at the outbreak by this rebellion, and from which it is just now emerging.

It was this claimer for something to be done which undoubtedly goaded on Generals Places and Sohenck to their unsuccessful efforts. Looking at matters from the outside stand-point, they doubtless thought it was perfectly easy to carry on the war with more vigor; the result is known, and may be summed up in this one phrase—every departure. It is some may be said of reading as of writer of the custions policy of Gen. Scott hus so far previde dicatrons.

It is common, we know, to point to Gen. Lyon as an evidence of what vigor and energy can accomplish. But Gen Lyon, it must be remembered, is contending against an unorganized army, got up on the spur of the moment by a silly Gevernor, and that it is a comparatively easy task to scatter such undiceiplined hordes as chaff before the wind. That Wheeling Convention was agrand affair, for it wrought the salvation of a great commonwealth, and removed the greatest difficulty that lay in the way of a restoration of the Union to its integrity without a resort to correct as against a State. It separated the State from the trainers in its midst, and left the national government free is deal with them as with a band of conspirators and rebels. It scatched the good old commonwealth out of the fire; and pow no one cares how fercely it burns, when nothing but treasen and trainers are to be consumed.

Missouri will have to be put through a similar process; for although no ordinance of secession has placed her in a false position, yet she is this day without any State government at all, except such as a supplied by the military sutherity. Her Governor and other State officers having made war poon the Union, are not only deposed. But driven out, and now the work of the Armstrolig Gup.
