PITTSBURGH:

WEDNESDAY MORNING, JULY 3, 1861.

A Correction from Mr. Russell.

The correspondent of the London Times has written a letter from Clifton, Niagara, in correction of some statements about himself and his correspondence which have been widely published in the newspapers. He says he never stated that his letters had been "tampered with" in the mails. Having always sent them by express, in consequence of the known insecurity of the mails, he knew they could not be "tampered with" where they had never been. During the six or seven weeks he was in the South, he says, he scarcely saw a Northern paper, and remarked at Cairo that he had, so far, seen only "small portions or mutilated bits" of his correspondence in any of the papers he met with. He then justifies himself from certain charges unfairly brought against him in reference to his breath, as alleged, of a somewhat ostentatiously avowed neutrality—which made him very scrupulous about communicating to Col. Brown or Gen. Bragg anything he saw or heard, and yet left him free to write all out in full for the Times, to be read there by both as soon as the return mail would arrive from Europe, never to speak of the risks there were of his letters being intercepted and read before, for the exclusive benefit of one of the parties. "When Gen. Bragg or Col. Brown," he remarks, "accuse me of breach of faith, I may stand on my defence. I distinctly announced that, whilst my lips should be sealed in this country in reference to any information they might think proper to communicate, they must expect to see it all come back in due course of post in the columns of the Times."

Tax for the Families of Soldiers.

As we are in favor of free discussion, we give place to a communication this morning upon the subject indicated by our caption. Perhaps it would have been better for the writer's side of the argument if he had not written at all. Our readers will put their own estimate upon his harsh and heartless production. He blunders in the first sentence, in asserting that we advocated a levy of two and a half per cent. The law allows of 2½, but we only asked for two. He then assumes that the Judges won't attend to the distribution, and that the Commissioners can't. That, of course, requires no reply. Then he speaks of the extreme caution required where money is to be disbursed. Very well, let the thing be well watched. Nobody will object to that. Finally, he winds up with a proposition to turn the families of the men who have gone to fight our battles, perhaps to lay down their lives in our defense, over to the Guardians of the Poor. Let us hear no more such talk as that. As we have already said, we give the article a place to show how little can be said against the measure we advocated, and which we trust will be promptly adopted.

Hon. Frank P. Blair on Compromise.

This gallant Missourian, who is the sole Republican member of Congress from any of the Slave States, and who was Gen. Lyon's right hand man in the late gallant campaign against the rebels in that State, made a speech in New York, while on his way to Washington. He expressed confidence in the wisdom of Gen. Scott; still—a little more action would please him better. On the subject of compromise, which is still talked of a little, he was very emphatic; and as the sentiments of such a man, coming as he does from a Slave State, are important, we give his remarks in full upon that point:

"As for this talk about compromise, I do not believe that the Administration entertains any such idea. [Cheers.] It would be folly in the extreme. [Cries of "That's so."] It would be the worst thing that could possibly happen under any circumstances. It would sow the seeds of future wars infinitely worse than this, and convert our country into a Mexico, to be convulsed every four years by the adherents of the disappointed Presidential aspirants. For my part, I am utterly opposed to any compromise, or any treaty with men in rebellion, with arms in their hands, against this Government. [Loud and prolonged cheers.] Nothing but surrender, at discretion, to receive such punishment as this Government may choose to deal out to these traitors can satisfy the honest heart of the country now. I am for a vigorous prosecution of the war; for giving to the Administration all the men and all the money that the Government can command, and to have a speedy settlement of this question, and I have no doubt as to the way. It will ultimately be settled. We have not only got the right on our side, but have the "heaviest battalions and the heaviest artillery." I believe that the Administration entertains no other view than to prosecute the war to the uttermost—to bring about a peace which shall be lasting, because the enemy will have no power to disturb it. [Applause.] This is the only peace that can last. I am against any negotiation with traitors, except at the cannon's mouth, and whoever puts himself forward with a view of negotiating terms between the Government and the traitors with arms in their hands, is, in my opinion, little better than the traitors themselves. [Cheers.] No matter what motive may dictate his course. I mean to say that the men who do it may do it with honest motives; they may be brave, patriotic and honest, but the effect is to give aid and comfort—to give hope to the enemy, and whoever does that inflicts a deep injury upon the Government. It is not my purpose to make a speech—that has not been my avocation for some time past. I am not competent to instruct the people of this great city—the heart of our country—which contains a great proportion of the intelligence of the land, where the whole transactions of the Union come every day under their observation, while I have been in a remote and obscure part of the country, and away from the transactions of the day."

Our friends may make themselves perfectly easy on that matter. No man in Congress will even venture to talk about compromise; and we feel assured that Congress will stand almost as a unit in favor of a vigorous prosecution of the war. The reluctance which some people felt at fighting with States some time ago need no longer be felt; for now that Virginia has set up a constitutional and loyal government in place of the one which abolished itself by going over to the open and declared enemies of the national government, we are fighting for that State, not against it. And what is true of Virginia is true of Missouri, and will soon be true of Tennessee, and ultimately of all the States. The nation is at war with traitors, not with States—with usurpers, not with men invested with lawful authority.

[For the Daily Pittsburgh Gazette.]

"Slaying at the Moon."

Foremost in the rank of American journals stands the New York Tribune. Perhaps this unrivaled paper has done more than any other agency to awaken public sentiment to a clear conception of the dangers which threaten the integrity of the Union from the schemes of the pro-slavery propagandists. With a zeal and an unsurpassed ability which at once challenges and defies all competition, it has labored to arouse in the Nation a just sense of patriotism and duty. For long years, it has kept patient and unwearied vigil at the altar of Freedom, and at last its labors, oft so thankless, have been crowned with a splendid triumph, and its views, sanctioned by the acclaim of a free people, are the tenets of the now dominant party. Whoever else, in the struggle of truth with error, might fall by the wayside, weak and dispirited; whoever might, in the hour of trial, prove recreant or false, the Tribune, "true as the needle to the pole," was ever found faithful to its high mission and to the cause of progress and humanity.

Envious of its just greatness and growing influence, those arm of course to be found who carp at its course and affect to despise its warnings. Particularly is this true of certain obscure provincial papers, which seize upon every pretext to abuse and malign its editors. Of this sort is a paper in our city known hereabouts as the Evening Chronicle. Indeed, the wonderful genius who presides over its columns gravely states, in speaking of Greely, that "We have long had our opinion about him," (!) and proceeds to announce that "He (Greely) lacks caution and practicality," and a world more of similar oracular givings-out. In another article, this fellow also states that the Tribune has been especially busy in the dirty and mischievous business of embarrassing the Administration.

It may serve a good purpose to remind this renowned knight of the Chronicle, that no journal in this country contributed as much to the elevation of the present administration to power as did the Tribune; and that when such as he were engaged in the dirty and mischievous business of endeavoring to fritter away the fruits of that victory by all sorts of "compromise" dodges, the Tribune stood faithful and firm. Who of the readers of the Chronicle has yet forgotten or ceased to smile in derision at the recollection of the series of articles put forth by its editor with an air of importance and gravity irresistibly ludicrous, pointing to new compromises and surrenders as the only means of saving the country. The zeal of the Tribune unlike that of its present censors, is that which springs from the consciousness of duty and genuine love of country; and its indignation at even the appearance of indecision or timidity on the part of the Government, that patriotic fervor which does not hesitate to find utterance, and, if needs be, to drag the wavering official, however high his station, to the bar of public opinion. The Tribune has labored too long and earnestly to lag behind now, or to tamely submit to see the verdict of the people neutralized by inaction or criminal connivance at compromise.

Instead of pitiful flings at the editors of the Tribune let the Chronicle humbly intimate its course and profit by its teachings, and it possible labor to acquire in some degree its elegance of style, and the force of its logic. By so doing at some distant day it may achieve perchance, a tithe of the excellence and position of its Metropolitan contemporary.

No More Sawdust.

An honest country gentleman once gave it as his opinion, in the British House of Commons, that Sir Robert Peel "was not that kind of man that you could easily sprinkle salt on his tail." We trust Lieutenant-General Scott will not think it disrespectful if we suggest to various newspaper correspondents and critics that he also is a tolerably old bird, and not to be caught with every kind of chaff.

To read and believe the half of the many statements which appear in the journals would soon bring one to the unhappy conviction that the different army corps east and west are acting in entire independence of each other, and that every Major-General and Brigadier is pursuing his share of the campaign as seems to him best, without reference to any general plan or responsibility to any Commander-in-Chief.

Some days ago the public was startled by a distinct statement from Louisville that General McClellan had made what seemed a very foolish contract with the traitorous Kentucky authorities, and at once several journals opened their batteries upon him, and threw such a storm of one hundred and twenty pounder shells into the poor General's camp as was thought likely to damage him severely. But yesterday we learned from him that the Kentucky authorities had made a statement which had no foundation in fact, and that he had made no such agreement as was given out. Whereupon it may be said that these journalistic bombs did no harm—being filled with sawdust, as were some others recently fired on the Potomac.

General McClellan having cleared his skirts, the turn is now with General Patterson. Letter-writers do not hesitate to say that he is an imbecile, and that but for his "unaccountable refusal to act" the rebel General, Johnson, would ere this have been annihilated. A few days ago it was General Cadwalader who was to blame for inactivity, and who had let the rebels slip between his fingers.

A bombshell filled with sawdust is not thought by old campaigners a very dangerous missile, which may account for the neglect with which General Scott repays the kind attentions and instructions of the letter-writers. But even sawdust bombs may annoy a commander-in-chief, who has something else to do than dodge them, and whose head—not being so thick as newspaper correspondents'—cannot stand everything. Wherefore, it may be as well, if shells must be thrown, to use only such as will really explode. In other words, it is but fair that when an army letter-writer wants to grumble, he should first be sure of his grievance. Else readers will begin to think, by and by, that the correspondent does not, after all, know so much as the Commander-in-Chief.—[N. Y. Post.

Arrest of a Rebel Bearer of Dispatches in New York—Interception of Highly Important Documents.

We take the following from the N. Y. World of yesterday:

Edward R. Ruggles, a young man, seventeen years of age, is at present detained at police headquarters by order of Secretary Seward, on the charge of being a bearer of dispatches from the rebel army, and also of being an emissary of the rebel government. The prisoner is a son of General Ruggles, now commander of a portion of the rebel forces in Virginia. He is a very intelligent and highly educated lad, rather prepossessing in appearance, and is engaging in conversation; quick in perception, and acute in observation, and seems eminently adapted to the mission upon which he has been sent out. He left Montgomery under private instructions, received from Jeff Davis in person, and made his way to Havana. From that place he proceeded to Aspinwall, where his ever-inquisitiveness relative to American ocean and California steamers attracted the attention and excited the suspicion of the American consul, who forwarded a description of his person to Secretary Seward. Directions were at once sent to Superintendent Kennedy, to arrest the boy as soon as he landed in New York. Detectives Eustace and Farley were intrusted with the case. The lad arrived here, and put up at a Cortlandt street hotel under the name of Seymour, doubtless assuming this name to throw the officers of the track, should there be any after him. Three hours after his arrival he was safe in the hands of the detectives, who at once lodged him at headquarters. The papers found upon him disclosed a most ingenious and elaborate plan for capturing the California steamers, the details of which were to be carried out with the greatest secrecy. Gen. Johnson, of California, was to be in the plot. Ruggles had also carefully prepared maps and many papers of great value. The arrest is so important that Secretary Seward telegraphed Mr. Kennedy on Saturday to use extra precautions in detaining the prisoner. Young as he is he has no little military experience, having been for several years at the Naval School at Annapolis. He was born in a fort, was a constant attendant upon his father, who held a commission in the army of the United States, and is therefore well calculated to see and comment upon any weak points. Information of which might be of service to the enemy. The future disposition of the prisoner rests with the department at Washington.

Good Crops at the West.—

The Chicago Tribune of Wednesday says of the growing crops and the movements of produce:

"The weather, during the past week, has been warm and dry, and quite favorable to the growth of both wheat and corn. In the southern part of this State they have commenced to harvest winter wheat. This crop is reported to be excellent—the best that has been known for three or four years past. With regard to the spring crops, the reports are on the whole favorable. In some sections in the central part of this State the wheat has been damaged by rust; but from Iowa, Northern Illinois and Wisconsin the reports are glowing. The corn, though backward on account of the late spring, is thriving well, and, with a favorable summer, there is not much danger.
