PITTSBURGH:

THURSDAY MORNING, JULY 11, 1861.

A Fling of Truce from Jeff. Davis.

The telegraph, yesterday, made mention of one Taylor, who had been in Washington from the Rebel camp, under a flag of truce, but said nothing of his previous arrival or the object of his visit. The New York papers just received supply the lacking information. The Washington correspondent of the Herald, under date of July 8th, says:

"To-day, about noon, Lieut. Col. Taylor, of Caroline, Virginia, an officer in the rebel army, presented himself, with a flag of truce, to Col. Porter, while the latter, attended by an escort, was reconnoitering for a camp for his brigade, about six miles from Arlington. Col. Taylor stated he was the bearer of dispatches from Jeff. Davis to the President of the United States. He was taken to Gen. McDowell's headquarters at Arlington, where he was detained until late this evening, when General Scott dispatched an escort to bring him to headquarters.

Nothing had transpired of what may be the nature of these dispatches, and, as may be imagined, speculation runs high as to what is the precise object of Col. Taylor's mission. Some say it has grown out of the present visit to Richmond of Mr. May, the member of Congress alluded to in a previous dispatch. Mr. May, it is said, has visited Richmond with a full knowledge of and pass from President Lincoln. While this is true, it is a positive fact—and I have the highest authority for asserting it—that President Lincoln discountenanced the visit of Mr. May, and would not consent to hear any proposition from him in regard to his visit, except that he desired a pass from the President, which was given with no more belief that it would be of benefit than Dr. Richards was recently benefitted by a federal pass."

The idea of Jefferson Davis sending "dispatches" to President Lincoln, is absurd. What right has a Rebel to send "dispatches" to the government against which he is in rebellion, or what "dispatches" could he possibly have to send?

It seems from the report in yesterday's paper, that Mr. Taylor went back without an answer, leaving behind him whatever papers he was entrusted with. This is right. There is but one answer to any communication these traitors may send to the government—"Lay down your arms and submit;" and Mr. Taylor undoubtedly carried back such a verbal message to his commander. The correspondent of the Tribune says:

"The impudence of the traitors in sending an officer here with a flag of truce, for any purpose whatever, except as a preliminary to laying down their arms, awakens general astonishment. It may be that Jeff. has heard of the President's Message, the hearty response of the country to its recommendation, and the preparations for a grand advance, and is moving toward peace openly, as his emissaries have been for weeks secretly. But this is hardly probable yet, and the conclusion of the officers who conversed with the messenger that his business was not of the gravest importance, is probably the correct one."

The Money Policy of the Government.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in his report, proposes three plans for raising money to carry on the war, which may be briefly summed up as follows:

1. Three year Treasury or Exchequer Bills, bearing 7.30 ⅗ cent., for the convenience of calculation at 20 cents on the $1,000, or 2 cents on the $100, per diem, interest payable semi-annually, to be distributed on popular subscription through out the country, to the extent, it need be, of one hundred millions.

2. A thirty-year Funded Stock, in Federal or Sterling denominations, inscribed or coupon, bearing 7 ⅗ cent., not to exceed one hundred millions.

3. One year Treasury Notes for popular circulation, and for the convenience in the receipts and disbursements of the Government, of the denomination of $10 and $20, and upward, to bear the rate of 3.65 ⅗ cent. per annum; to the amount, it need be, of fifty millions; or, if deemed preferable, a popular circulation to the same amount, redeemable at all times, on demand, and to bear no interest. The rate of 3.65 ⅗ cent. was the one adopted by Mr. Secretary Walker through the Mexican War, and is the equivalent of one cent per diem on each $100, or one mill per diem on each $10 bill.

Congress ought to authorize all of these plans, with authority to increase the amount to be raised by either. If the thirty year funded stock is not taken at par it should not be issued; and the Secretary might then, in his discretion, issue one hundred millions in treasury notes, in tens and twenties, either with or without interest, as thought best. The notes would form an excellent national currency; and it seems to us poor policy to sell a national loan under par when the people would be glad to take these treasury notes at par.

Not the Man.

A letter, on American affairs in general and the American crisis in particular, addressed to Cassius M. Clay, and bearing the subscription "A. Alison," has attracted some notice and provoked the indignant commente of some of our journals, on the supposition of its being the production of Sir Archibald Alison, the well known Historian. Now, as his voluminous History as well as his Essays will prove, we readily admit that Alison is very much of an old-school tory, as understood in British politics; still that circumstance alone is not sufficient to make us willing to charge upon him the authorship of a letter which bears no mark of his manner in any part of it—neither in thought nor in expression. There is, we believe, some obscure writer in London, not in Lanarkshire, who signs himself "A. Alison," and who writes letters to the newspapers, as Sir Archibald has never been in the habit of doing—to whom, if the matter were worth the trouble of enquiry, it is probable the authorship of the letter in question might be traced by certain marks of affiliation more conclusive than complimentary. If "A. Alison," the letter-writer who addressed Mr. Clay on American affairs, is even 'Archibald,' and not 'Andrew' or 'Alexander,' there will still be an interval between that Archibald and the other—set down in the Scottish Directory as the Sheriff of Lanark, and in books of a less local character as the writer of a well known history, the author of which ought to be beyond the suspicion of having written such a letter as that on the American Question.

FEMALE SPIES.—The most active spies in the interest of Jeff. Davis, at Washington, are females. They take advantage of their sex to claim immunity from search, and pass through our lines to the enemy with all the information they can gather and all the documents they can conceal in their dress. The Washington correspondent of the Herald says:

"It is stated, on high authority, that there are several ladies in this city, who have occupied prominent positions in the social circle, who are now and have been for some time in correspondence with Jeff. Davis and other leading rebels. The object, it is understood, which these ladies have in view is to effect some plan of adjustment. It appears that Jeff. Davis has indicated to the said lady or ladies what would be satisfactory, or rather what the South would accept as a basis of settlement. It is further understood that it has been laid before certain high functionaries of the government. It is not at all probable that these patriotic ladies will accomplish their purpose, as the government is decidedly opposed to any arrangement or plan of adjustment with the rebels. The government intend to whip them first and settle with them afterwards. The present Congress takes the same view, backed up by the people. The correspondence alluded to is said to be exceedingly interesting."

WAR DISPATCHES CUT OFF.—The following official order has just been issued at Washington. It should have been issued months ago:

[OFFICIAL.]

Henceforward the Telegraph will convey no dispatches concerning the operations of the Army not permitted by the Commanding General.

WINFIELD SCOTT.

DEPARTMENT OF WAR, July 8, 1861.

The above order is confirmed.

SIMON CAMERON, Sec'y of War.

DISTRESS IN THE SOUTH.—The National Intelligencer publishes the following extract from a letter dated at Vicksburg, Mississippi, June 10th. It speaks for itself:

"Our Southern cities, and especially Vicksburg, can be compared very well to a steamer on the Mississippi, whose bottom is perforated by a thousand holes, which is perceptibly and rapidly going under. There is no business doing. The shelves are bare—the merchants lolling on counters. There is no money, no credit, and provisions scarce and dear. If the war continues, this whole country will be overwhelmed in bankruptcy and ruin. There is no money in the country. To supply the deficiency and defray the expenses of the Government, and to support the army, we have resorted to the issue of Confederate bonds, which, if the blockade is effectual, will, I am afraid, be equal to the old Continental money. Our negroes bring us in very little. It is almost impossible to get employment at any price. Thousands have enlisted in the army merely for a support. The only bustle in our city is from the soldiery drilling and coming and going. The season has been quite favorable. Crops are fine, and fruit in abundance. I am in hopes we shall not perish for want of food, although many must suffer."

HEADQUARTERS.—The Richmond correspondent of the Memphis Appeal says, "It is told of Mr. Toombs that being recently importuned by an acquaintance for a position as clerk in the State Department, he replied: "What need for a clerk? Why I can carry the whole State Department in my hat.'"

KENTUCKY—OFFICIAL VOTE.—The Louisville Journal gives the following table of the official vote of Kentucky at the late Congressional election:

	Union.	Disunion.
First District	6,225	6,933
Second "	9,271	3,368
Third "	10,392	3,113
Fourth "	10 344	2,469
Fifth "	8,217	2,719
Sixth "	8,101	227
Seventh "	11,035	2,862
Eighth "	8 272	5,706
Ninth "	12,260	3,720
Tenth "	8,376	4,326
	92,460	37,700
	37,700
Total Union Majority	54,760

The above vote is full and official, save in the instance of Boone county, in the Tenth District, from which county no returns were received.

The Great Fire in London.

(From the London Times, June 25.

It is only by a providential circumstance that we have been spared the duty of recording one of the most terrible calamities by which a great city can be visited. There was a moment on Saturday evening when it seemed possible that the great fire of London might occur over again; and, indeed, it was not owing to any resources of modern times that this catastrophe was escaped. Our reports of the conflagration will have shown how powerless were all our inventions against the fury of the flames. Had the wind been high, or had it blown steadily away from the river in the direction of the town, it is impossible to say what might have been the fate of the southern portion of the metropolis. The least that could have happened must have been destruction over a vast area, and protection for the rest of the city at the cost of a circle of ruins. By blowing up belts of houses at proper distances the flames might have been confined within certain limits, but nothing short of that desperate operation would have given us security. The argument becomes the more impressive when we observe that everything, apparently, was in our favor when the fire began, and that it asserted, nevertheless, its absolute mastery before five hours had passed.

It was not in the dead of the night, but on a summer afternoon, that the fire brigade in Watling street was summoned to Cotton's wharf, close to London bridge, on the South side of the Thames. The engines, directed by the chief of the brigade in person, were quickly on the spot, when it was found that a fire had broken out in the first story of a warehouse. The building was perfectly new, and constructed on approved principles of architecture; strong party walls, provided with iron doors, divided the fabric, and the warehouses in the vicinity were reputed to be fireproof also. The place had not been abandoned for the night; the workmen were still on the spot, and one of them actually delivered in a small heap of smoking hemp the germ of that conflagration which before midnight was represented by three acres of flame. Unhappily, the smoke at that early period protected the fire. So dense were its volumes as to forbid all approach, and the flame was left to do its work. Still there was a vast array of engines in the street as well as on the stream; there was a trained brigade of firemen, conducted by a courageous and experienced leader; there was a strong body of police to aid in keeping order, and there were fireproof walls to contend against fire. But, of all these appliances, not one availed to control the flames. They burst forth from the first warehouse, and seized another. Iron and brick, though they did not actually blaze, yet burnt through and through, till they became red hot masses. Mr. Braidwood, the chief of the brigade, at once discerned the true state of the case, and predicted from his survey the magnitude of the conflagration. It was the last opinion he was fated to utter. A few minutes later, as he was placing his men at their posts, and encouraging them by his directions and example, he met his death. A tremendous explosion of saltpeter in a vault shook down the entire frontage of a warehouse; and he was buried under the ruins. His fall dismayed his men, already distressed by the severity of their duties, and yet they rushed like brave followers to his rescue—but in vain. A second explosion drove them from the spot, and the ascendancy of the fire was now complete. It does not seem, indeed, that there was ever much chance of subduing the flames even from the first, but from this moment the contest was decided. The brigade was powerless. All our great engines and all our trained firemen were of no avail. Our fireproof buildings failed to keep out the fire, and it depended simply on the force and direction of the wind how much of Southward might be left standing on Monday morning.

Providentially, the night was calm; yet every now and then, when a little gust came up the river, the redoubled roar of the flames and the flakes of fire launched into the atmosphere showed the magnitude of the peril. Even as it was, the spectacle and the ruin are alike without parallel in our time. Three acres of ground were gradually covered with a mass of fire, glowing and crackling at a white heat like a lake of molten iron. The saltpeter, the tallow, the tar, and the other combustibles stored in the warehouses ran blazing into the river, until the very stream appeared to be covered with flames. Ships were burned as well as houses, and the danger to life was almost as great on the Thames as in the street. The glare of the conflagration was not only visible but strikingly conspicuous thirty miles off. The multitude of spectators was enormous, and the excitement incredible. We may truly say, indeed, that never, for two centuries, has the metropolis seen such a catastrophe.

Returning Confidence.

Within the last two or three days, a most marked improvement in confidence and cheerfulness has come over our business circles. The clear and emphatic tone of the President's Message, the masterly expositions and plans of the Secretaries of the Treasury, War, and Navy, the lofty uncompromising spirit manifested by Congress, the splendid condition of our troops now ready for action—all taken in conjunction with the latest intelligence from Europe, which clinches the certainty that the rebels will get no aid and comfort from Europe—have gone far to dispel every doubt that the rebellion will be short lived. It is a season of the year when under any circumstances, general business would be at a stand still; and no material change in that regard can be looked for just at present. But the returning confidence of the business community in the strength and duration of the government is having a most excellent effect in opening the way for the resumption of business when its natural season returns. Our business men take heart because they see, in these indications, an earnest of the end.—[N. Y. World.

DEFEAT OF AN IMPORTANT MEASURE.—In the British House of Commons, on the 20th of June, the bill for the abolition of church rates was lost through the casting vote of the speaker. The English dissenters will never abandon this measure until it is carried.

REVIVAL OF BUSINESS.—The Norfolk Mills, which have been stopped for five weeks past, will resume operations to-day, and employ three hundred of the old hands in the manufacture of carpets.—[Boston Atlas.]

We beg our old friends in Memphis not to disparage our gallant namesake, General Prentiss. We tell you, gentlemen, he is the "coming man."—[Louisville Journal.]

GARIBALDI'S HEALTH.—A letter from Turin, of the 18th of June, says:

"Garibaldi is decided not to return to this city, but intends to remain quietly at Caprera. He has never been ill since he went back to his island, and at this moment his health is excellent. I do not know why the report of his being ill was spread; but since the death of Count Cavour, unfounded rumors of numerous remarkable personages of Europe having died or fallen ill have been put into circulation.

DITHRIDGE'S IMPROVED OVAL

CARBON OIL

LAMP CHIMNEYS,

THE BEST THAT HAVE EVER YET been offered to the public. They are the best for the following reasons:

1. Because, being of an oval shape, the glass is everywhere equally distant from the flame, so that the draft is stronger and more regular.

2. The oval shape is better adapted to resist the effect of sudden expansion, so that it is impossible to crack them.

3. The glass is made largely of Lead and Pearlash, giving a great degree of strength and elasticity. The chimneys which heretofore have found to be so brittle as to crack even when not in use, are invariably made of Lime Glass instead of the Flint Glass, of which ours are manufactured.

4. But the greatest advantage of these Chimneys is that when you have one it will last forever, and if any housekeeper breaks one by the heat of the lamp, let her call at the Manufactory, Washington street, near Pennsylvania Avenue, and we will replace her cracked chimney by a down whole one. This proffer does not include accidents or those cases of breakage where the chimney has, through inexperience, been screwed so closely to the lamp as to prevent its expansion when heated.

Those who have hitherto denied themselves the luxury of the Carbon Oil Light on account of the great expense of chimneys, should know that there is no longer a necessity for them to endure the dim, sepulchral light of the antiquated tallow candle, for DITHRIDGE'S IMPROVED CHIMNEY has supplanted a Chimney that is made to last, and not merely to be sold.

☞ Remember, the place to get the FORT PITT GLASS WORKS, WASHINGTON STREET, near Pennsylvania Avenue. jel4:2w4m&sif E. D. DITHRIDGE.
