PUBLISHED DAILY AND WEEKLY BY
S. RIDDLE & CO.,
FIFTH STREET, ABOVE SMITHFIELD.
PITTSBURGH:
WEDNESDAY MORNING, JULY 24.

The Battle of Bull's Run on Sunday, July 21.

The following sketch of the action during the earlier part of the day on Sunday is by the Hon. H. J. Raymond, of the N. Y. Times, who, as will be seen, was an eye-witness:

The Union army advanced from Centreville in three columns at 3 o'clock on Sunday morning. Col. Richardson commanded the column by the road to Bull's Run, where the action of Thursday took place, and Col. Miles lay on the road and at Centreville to support him.

Gen. Tyler commanded the centre division, which took the Warrenton road—Gen. Schenck and Col. Sherman being in the advance. He had the three Connecticut regiments, two from Michigan, two from Wisconsin, and the Sixty-ninth and Seventy-ninth, from New York. Gen. M'Dowell, with Col. Hunter and a very powerful division, went out on this road, which leads directly forward to Manassas, crossing Bull's Run by a stone bridge, which had been mined.

The attack by these two points was intended mainly as a feint. The real attack was by Hunter, who took a narrow road two miles out leading to the right, having Heintz and the Rhode Island batteries, and leaving Col. Keyes on the centre at the crossing of the roads as a reserve. His orders were to proceed high up the stream, cut himself a path through the woods, cross over, and turn the position of the rebels on the north.

I went out with the entire column. At ten minutes before six we halted about a mile this side of the position of the rebels. The Sixty ninth and Seventy-ninth Regiments of New York were three to the right, in the woods, and the First and Second Ohio and the Second New York to the left in advance.

The thirty-pound Parrott gun was planted in the middle of the road, and at ten minutes past six it threw two shells into the battery of the enemy, but without eliciting any response. Ten minutes after, we heard firing on our left from Richardson's column, which was continued at intervals for two hours, but without eliciting any reply.

Our column remained silent, firing now and then a gun, and at twenty minutes to eight, Ayers's battery, formerly Sherman's, fired five or six rounds into the enemy, but without response. At a quarter before nine, shots were rapidly exchanged between the opposing skirmishers, and Gardner, of Lawrence, belonging to the Rhode Island Regiment, was reported killed.

At about ten o'clock, heavy clouds of dust showed that reinforcements were coming up to the rebels from Manassas, and was continued through the next three or four hours.

At 11 o'clock Ayres' Battery went to the front; the Sixty-ninth New York was ordered to deploy into the field in front, and firing was heard from Hunter's Division, on the extreme right far in advance.

The Ohio Regiments were pushed forward with the Second New York, and ran upon a masked battery of four guns, which killed and wounded quite a number of both.

Carlisle's Battery was brought to the front on the right, and soon drove the rebels out of the masked battery.

It was now 11½ o'clock, when Hunter's column appeared across the Run, advancing on the flank of the rebels, and the engagement soon became very active in his position. He kept steadily advancing, pouring in a steady fire of artillery and musketry.

The whole Brigade under Tyler was ordered forward to his support. The Sixty-ninth and Seventy-ninth New York, the First, Second and Third Connecticut, and the Second Wisconsin were sent in. A constant roll of musketry marked Hunter's advance, and the artillery from our column played incessantly on the flank of the rebels. So far as I could see, the latter were pushed backward a considerable distance to the road directly in front of where I stood, across which they charged twice with the bayonet upon our troops, but were repulsed each time. Our men crossed the road and poured in upon them a terrible fire of artillery and musketry.

The Rebels' Position at Manassas Described.

In a letter written to a Southern newspaper from the Rebel Camp we find the following description of their position—the strength and advantages of which are not perhaps greatly overrated:

This place still continues the headquarters of the army of the Potomac. There are many indications of an intended forward movement, the better to invite the enemy to an engagement, but the work of fortification still continues. By nature, the position is one of the strongest that could have been found in the whole State. About half way between the eastern spur of the Blue Ridge and the Potomac, below Alexandria, it commands the whole country between so perfectly that there is scarcely a possibility of its being turned. The right wing stretches off toward the headwaters of the Occoquon, through a wooded country, which is easily made impassable by the felling of trees. The left is a rolling table land, easily commanded from the successive elevations, till you reach a country so rugged that it is a defiance to itself. The key to the whole position, in fact, is precisely that point which the Washington Artillery are at first encamped, and though only half the battalion was then there, and we had only one company of infantry to support us, we slept as soundly under the protection of our guns as if we had been in a fort of the amplest dimensions.

Of the fortifications superadded here by General Beauregard (of which Mr. Rainer, it is, of course, not proper for me to speak. The general reader, in fact, will have a sufficiently precise idea of them by conceiving a line of forts some two miles in length, varying in form, with angles, salients, bastions, casemates and every thing that properly belongs to works of this kind.

The strength and advantages of this position at Manassas are very much increased by the fact that fourteen miles farther on is a position of similar formation, while the country between is admirably adapted to the subsistence and intrenchment of troops in numbers as large as they can easily be maneuvered on the real battle field. Water is good and abundant, forage such as is everywhere found in the rich farming districts of Virginia, and the communication with all parts of the country easy.

From Mexico.

A correspondent, writing from the city of Mexico on the 30th ultimo, furnishes some interesting particulars of the late events already stated in brief by telegraph:

After the re-installation of President Juarez, Gonzalez Ortego was elected Chief Justice, (equivalent to Vice President,) with the avowed purpose of supporting the President. The latter has declared his purpose of holding on to the Government; but whether he will escape the snares set for him is uncertain. Much intriguing is going on both among the Mexican and foreign population, and the condition of the country is distressing. On the 2d instant Marquez dispatched Carigas, a Spanish desperado, to Arroyazo to seize Don Melchoir Ocampo. This officer of Marquez took the hint and went by the French, and in London and Paris it is universal use.

Tyler—McDowell.

As some censure has been visited upon Brigadier General Tyler, of the Connecticut Volunteers, for the initial repulse at Bull's Run, it should be understood that his friends consider his course in the premises entirely right. He suspected, or knew, that masked batteries would be encountered at that point, and believed that scouts could neither approach them so as to discover their exact position nor draw their fire; and a reconnoissance in force was his only resort. This he made; and thus fixed the position of every battery; he suffering some loss and inflicting perhaps as much on the enemy. He did not expect to capture the batteries by that reconnoissance, but simply to get the lung of them.

It has been remarked that Gen. McDowell was eleven miles distant when the collision took place; whence it is concluded that Gen. Tyler transcended his orders. But an army of fifty thousand men is not a mathematical point; its front facing an enemy must have an extent of miles, and its commander can only be in one place at a time. Could Gen. McDowell have seen precisely where resistance would first be encountered, he would probably have been just there. But an army advancing through a wooded, broken country, cautiously feeling for the enemy, is liable to encounter them on any part of its front, and can neither choose nor see the point of initial collision.—*N. John Randolph's opinion of Virginia statesmen and their gentility, was thus forcibly given in a letter to Dr. Theo. B. Dudley, his relative. It is extracted from a volume of his letters, published by Carey, Lea & Blanchard, Philadelphia, 1834. The reader will recognize in the extract a faithful portraiture of those "contemptible" Virginians, who
