PITTSBURGH:
SATURDAY MORNING, JULY 27.

IMPORTANT FROM WASHINGTON.

FROM OUR OWN Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, July 23—AFTERNOON.

You should see the Avenue to-day! Yesterday, under a drenching rain, the gloom of Egypt could not be gloomier. May I never spend such another depressing season. Soldiers barefoot, coatless, wounded, dripping, unarmed, bareheaded! Soldiers who had spent the night before amid the forest, torn by thorns, drenched with wet and spotted with mud and filth! Soldiers begging for a mouthful of food, or lying prone in door ways, snatching the welcome rest which for many a weary hour they had not before enjoyed.

To-day the sun has come forth very cheerfully, and lends a little more pleasing here to the sad picture. The number of fugitive soldiers has vastly increased. You can scarcely elbow your way along the side-walk by the principal hotels, or by the temporary stopping places of the forces. Every variety of dress is seen. The remnants of the gallant bands who left here last week, and who fought like heroes up to the very muzzles of artillery, throwing their lives away, still are seen, and ever and anon a hearty, cheer goes up from their brave hearts. All the buildings which have for a long time past been hired by the government as temporary quarters for troops, but which have been for some weeks past, empty, are now again filled by the forces of Hamiltan's division, which were so terribly cut up. The ornamented fronts of the large edifices are covered with blankets and many colored breeches hung there to-day in the sun, which to-day is in both bright and genial. Trains of waggons loaded with baggage from the disastrous field, lines of ambulances with such of the wounded as can be moved, knots of yet eager listeners to the tales of hair-breadth escapes, deadly breaches and accidents by flood and field—these and many other features in this morning's panorama, serve to make the Avenue picturesque to-day, although one sees the gaunts but with an aching heart. Such is war, I suppose, and to those who have watched the rear of a repulsed army before, this may not be a painful sight.

I have never felt competent to give to your readers a general idea of the fight of Sunday. I do not know that I can now, but I have looked into the matter a little, and sought instruction from several intelligent men who were on the field. From Centreville, as a starting point, trace three fords. The middle one runs near Sudley Church. The left one runs to the east and west; the others—one about North-east and the other South-west. The last mentioned was the line of advance for our right wing, under Heintzelman, the middle for the centre under Tyler, and the third for the left wing under Miles. The principal fighting was on the right wing, and there, was the greatest slaughter on both sides. In fact the centre and left wing were scarcely engaged at all. Some skirmishing took place, but the right wing, where an effort was made to take the enemy in flank, was the great scene of the battle.

The enemy's position is a series of fortifications, in attack upon which we were repulsed. Manassas junction is the central point. From that, lines radiate toward Bull's Run. At the latter place a row of concealed batteries presented a semi-circular point to our forces, which point was again commanded by a row of batteries in the rear, and so on, the circle growing smaller toward the centre. The position against a front attack is, of course, entirely impregnable. Within this network of cannon 90,000 men were placed. From what I was always ready to tell in. Johnston arrived with a reinforcement on Saturday, which was nearly equal to all the force we had engaged. Our forces were brought up on the run and fought in the very presence of certain death. One officer of a certain regiment said to me that his forces were "double quicked" three miles in the boiling sun. The order was then at once to go into the action. The men loaded, with their tongues hanging out like so many panting oxen; some of the brave fellows fell sun struck; others were so weary they could not stand, and toppled and fired while lying on the ground. This regiment of which I speak had not tasted food for eighteen hours when they went into the fight. They were, however, on the left wing, and were not much exposed. The regiment lost only about thirty men.

On the left, the commanding officer was very drunk all day. This is a serious charge, I know, but I have it from a gentleman who rode with him near the action. I told him I had heard that such was the case, but had not found the man before who would say so from his own knowledge. "Well," was his remark, "you can say so now; I am ready to stand up to it."

The centre scarcely attracted the attention of the enemy. Brave men throughout the privates of the entire army were willing and anxious for the order to charge, but the only answer was: "Such gentlemen, are not my orders." Do you wonder at the disaster? Braver men never looked death than those we sent into Virginia. They were, however, without a chief. Splendid Colonels were on the field. Howard, McCook, Burnside, the lamented Cameron, Slocum and Wilcox, the gallant Jamison, Fershen and Fowler, all behaved beyond praise. One Colonel, whose name I will not mention, got off his horse at the commencement of the fight, and retired to the rear. He did not even take his pistols. He was in fact a non-combatant.

Charles Morris M'Cook, nephew of the gallant Colonel above named, and relative of the veteran Doctor in our city, was slaughtered in the battle. He was but seventeen years old, and died like a hero of the olden times, in deadly conflict with cavalry. Peace to the brave young soul. While I write I hear the dead march, to which measure the body has just been borne to the grave.

The deadliest hate pervades the troops who have come hither. They all declare that the secessionists rode over the field of battle and sabred the wounded and dying. Several prisoners were brought in here to-day. One of the Zouaves made a push at one of them as he was being escorted up the avenue, and would have slain him but for the guard. The Zouave then plucked off his canteen and struck the "secesher" over the head, nearly splitting the skull.

I am informed that Gen. McClellan has arrived here. He could not have come at a better time. Forces, too, are needed here. It will take 100,000 men to do now what 50,000 might have done last week. Our cause is thrust back badly. Camp equipage, ammunition, baggage and cannon in vast amounts have fallen into the enemy's hands. The General in command of our forces does not appear to have been able to use the men he had. It is a fact that only about 21,000 men were engaged in the dreadful conflict of Sunday. They made an impression on the defensive works of the enemy. They slaughtered a good many of their soldiers, but did not "jar" a battery. As soon as one in front was taken, two opened upon it. Manassas is not a place to be attacked by infantry. It is a servant system of forts, trenches, concealed batteries and entrenchments.

LUDOVICUS.

WASHINGTON, July 24, 1861.

Washington presents different scenes to-day from those of yesterday. Most of the regiments which returned to this side of the river are back in their old camps, and are rapidly getting into their former condition, while several are marching through the streets fully equipped and with their old complement of men. The New York Twenty-second left its camp this afternoon and marched through Washington. The enthusiasm which greeted their appearance was very great. Before leaving their camp, they were addressed by their Colonel in some spirited remarks, which the men loudly cheered. The New York Twenty-fifth also broke up camp to-day and moved into Washington. Neither of these regiments have been in action, and they are full of fighting enthusiasm. The New York Twenty-fourth are on Capitol Hill. This afternoon, wagon loads of arms, camp materials, etc., came into this regiment and were unloaded. Many of the arms were picked up on the road and look as though they had been through several wars.

Flag of Truce Turned Back.

The flag of truce sent out by Major Wadsworth for the purpose of obtaining the wounded and the bodies of the dead was received, but Major Wadsworth was turned back with an intimation that he had better keep away. It is certain that Beauregard will refuse to permit a flag of truce to enter his lines for any purpose. The reason given is that the flag of truce sent to President Lincoln by Col. Taylor was sent back without an answer, and, therefore, not treated with such courtesy as the rules of war demand. The fact probably is, that Beauregard does not wish any of the government aids to know the extent of his loss.

Position of our Troops.

There is no truth in the report that Federal troops occupy Fairfax Court House. Our lines do not extend beyond Falls Church. There are small bodies of rebels at and near Fairfax.

Professor Lowe made a balloon reconnaissance to-day near Falls Church, and reports that the enemy are largely encamped between Fairfax, and Centreville. In coming down he landed between the enemy's pickets and ours, and came near being caught.

There are now seventeen thousand three months' men here who are waiting their discharge to return home, but they will not be mustered out until ample reinforcements have arrived. In some of these regiments there is a disposition to organize and enlist for the war. But in the present depression it will require the most active exertions of their officers, in whom little or no confidence is now felt, to infuse the proper spirit into the men. The men seem to feel better than they did yesterday, but there is a gloom yet remaining among the regiments at large.

The Rhode Island Troops.

In the Rhode Island regiments two hundred and twenty are killed, wounded and missing. I visited these regiments this afternoon, and the gloom that hangs over them is painful. Instead of the admiring thousands who were wont to witness their evening parade, but few straggling wayfarers; and on the place where their splendid batteries were planted there is now but a single gun. The Rhode Island First hope to get off home to-morrow, but the Second will remain, they being three
