CO-OPERATION REFUSED.—The Democrats of Ohio and New York have refused to cooperate with the Republicans in bringing out and supporting but one ticket for State officers. In Ohio the invitation was addressed to the masses of the party, but refused: while in New York it was addressed to the Democratic State Committee and unceremoniously rejected.

The experiment having been thus tried in these two States, it is not likely that it would succeed any better in other States. It was worth while, however, to make it. The Republicans have thereby shown their willingness to forget party in their desire to serve their country, and the Democrats, by refusing the magnanimous offer, have shown that they prefer their party to their country. Let them have the full benefit of their choice.

In these instances, and in others somewhat similar in Iowa and elsewhere, the resolutions of the Democratic Conventions and Committees show conclusively the course the party intends to pursue. In all these cases it has adopted resolutions in favor of prosecuting the war, preserving the Union and enforcing the Constitution and Laws, but, it blames the administration for getting us into the war; censures the management of it; advocates the early termination of it, and is in favor of peace by the adoption of any measures that will secure it.

The party dare not oppose the war, openly; it dare not make itself the anti-war party; but, while pretending to be in its favor, it will do all it can to destroy the unity and harmony of the North, and watch its chance (should any occur) to come in with propositions of compromise for the sake of peace.

Very well. It has the right to choose its own course, and it has chosen it. The people are on the side of this war and opposed to all compromise, and we have no fears for the result of any election pending this Fall. But it will be well to watch these Democratic politicians. Their devotion to the war is wordy, but none too deep; and those who are for the war with "buts" and "ifs" must not blame us if we do not trust them too far.

Catching Fugitive Slaves.

We find, in a dispatch from St. Louis to the Chicago Tribune, the paragraph following:

"The secessionists this morning attempted to raise an excitement on account of three fugitive slaves having taken refuge in the Arsenal. Their outcries were at once hushed by the prompt rendering up, by the military, of the slaves to their owner. This conduct has had a marked favorable effect upon the public mind."

We learn, also, by dispatches from Sandy Hook to the New York press, that Gen. Banks has been engaged in the same business, some three slaves having been given up by him under the orders previously issued to Gen. Patterson, his predecessor.

We thought if bad enough when, the other day, we learned that Col. B. Biddle Roberts, at Annapolis, had caught and returned three fugitives; (do they always escape in threes?) but it is infinitely worse when such men as Gen. Fremont and Gen. Banks engage in the disreputable business. If they are acting under orders, they have their excuse in that; but it is time the order, if such there be, were revoked. This grand army was called into being under the holy impulses of Freedom; and it is degrading to the manhood of those composing it, and the cause they have entrusted to serve to turn them over to the task of blood-hounds and negro-catchers.

But, it will be asked, are we not under Constitutional obligations to return fugitives? Not, certainly, to the people of a State whose citizens are in arms against the Constitution. Admitting, for the sake of argument, that such an obligation is imposed by the Constitution; what obligation can the Government or its army owe to those who are disregarding all their Constitutional obligations?

But, it will be said, again, these slaves belonged to Union men. Oh, of course. Every Rebel whose negro escapes into our lines is a Union man until he gets them back. It is astonishing how quickly the escape of a slave brings out the Union proclivities of his owner. The hardiest Rebel will become a Union man, under such circumstances, and even take the oath of allegiance, if he can so get back his contraband. Lying and perjury are nothing to such fellows. Wherever our army has penetrated, the country occupied by them swarms with "Union" men, for the nonce; but it is remarkable how quiet they were before, on that subject, and how quickly their Unionism subsides after the army leaves. Nearly all the prisoners we take, by some queer chance, turn out to be "Union" men; and so it will be with every Southerner who finds himself in our power. This "Union" dodge, however, to use the common phrase, is about "played out;" and we counsel the government that, if it would keep the heart of the people warm towards it, this thing of using the army to wrench runaway slaves for Rebels and bogus "Union" men must be abandoned. Let those whose calling it is follow that business; the army was called into being for no such purpose.

A CAUCUS OF TRAITORS in the Maryland Legislature have resolved to call a convention, to assemble in Baltimore, on Tuesday, September 10th, "for the purpose of devising means to oppose the war policy of the Federal Administration." These traitors proclaim that they desire to vindicate the rights of Maryland to exercise all and every authority within her own limits, and her power to prevent "prowling hordes of ruffian soldiers from passing over their territory to attack the rights and the interests of the people of other Commonwealths". Of course the convention is called for treasonable purposes. But it is a matter of surprise to many sensible loyal men why such villains are allowed to concoct and advocate their treason under the eye and within the hearing of the authorities at Washington.

Gen. McDowell's Report.

The official report of Brigadier General McDowell, concerning the battle of Bull Run, has just been published. It gives a clear account of the engagement, and of the movements preceding it. Its statement of the killed and wounded sums up as follows:

	Officers.	Non com. Off. & Privates.	Total.
Killed	19	462	491
Wounded	64	947	1011
Total	83	1409	1492

The actual number of missing cannot yet be stated, as every day soldiers heretofore reported as missing are making their appearance.

Female Rebels.

In the Washington correspondence of the New York Times we find the following:

Gen. Mansfield's office continues to be visited daily by ladies to procure passes permitting them to cross the river into Virginia. The important part played by female Secessionists in conveying intelligence to the rebels has resulted in the utmost caution being exercised in granting passes to ladies, and none, except those who bring undoubted proofs of their loyalty, are favored. This morning a young woman, elegantly attired, applied to Capt. De Kay for a pass, representing herself to be a sister of a Major in one of the regiments near Alexandria. On being questioned, she stated that she stopped at Willard's Hotel, but when asked the number of her room, was quite disconcerted, and in a moment she abruptly left. An inquiry at the hotel confirmed the suspicion that no such lady was an inmate of the house. Correspondence intercepted by the Government agents often discloses the names of women in Washington—some of them young in years—who sympathize with the rebels, and it not unfrequently happens that, not knowing the fate of their letters, the fair rebels apply for passes, and are confronted at once by proofs of their disloyalty.

Why, in the name of all that is patriotic, are these female rebels and spies permitted to run at large at Washington, after detection, as here stated? A spy is a spy, whether male or female; and Gen. Mansfield is mistaken if he thinks the gallantry of the people will excuse his easy treatment of these females. It is well known throughout the country, now, that the women of Washington are used as the means of communication with the rebels; and yet, when caught in the act, they are permitted to escape! There is neither gallantry nor good common sense in this. The arrest and punishment of one of these spies would soon deter the rest; while this mistaken leniency only encourages them.

A Magnificent Naval Scene.

The United States steamer Flag, formerly the Phineas Scraggs, arrived at our Navy Yard last evening, having on board thirty-six pirates, being the remaining portion of the officers and crew of the rebel privateer "Petrel," formerly the U. S. revenue cutter General Aiken.

A few days ago, the rebel craft was sunk in less than five minutes by the big guns of that gallant "man-of-war," the United States frigate St. Lawrence, commanded by Lt. G. Sartori. The officers of the Petrel were bluffed most essentially; they had the wool drawn over their eyes in the most effectual manner, notwithstanding they had the use of first class telescopes, which had been stolen from the United States Government.

The scene is described to us as thrilling in the extreme. The St. Lawrence had been cruising a few days off the coast, but the weather was calm; scarcely a breeze ruffled the bosom of the ocean. The rebel steamer had run out several times, and kept at a very respectful distance, and then ran back again into the inlet between Charleston and Savannah. This backing and filling continued a day or two, as long as the weather remained calm.

A breeze sprung up, and the St. Lawrence, with ports closed, and her sails being merchant rig, moved forward at a slow pace, and came gradually nearer and nearer the shore. She looked like an A No. 1 merchant vessel. When within six or seven miles of the danger of shoals, or shore, the Petrel poked her nose out from the inlet, and then returned again, as though fear was entertained as to the true character of the larger craft. Commander Sartori seized in a most splendid style.

He made more sail, as though he wanted to get away; the Petrel again about ship and came in a little nearer; the Commander of the St. Lawrence now allowed to become tolerably at ease with the movements of the Petrel; he crowded more sail on as fast as a law men could do the work; the crew generally, as well as the officers, were not to be seen; good glasses on the gallant "man-of-war" brought the Petrel pretty close, and movements were made accordingly. The Commander played the game scientifically, and thus the unsuspecting Petrel was drawn in closer and closer, and finally let fly a ball, which crossed the bow of the St. Lawrence.

The commander, Sartori, ordered more sail, when the Petrel was hailed as one with another gun, the ball from which passed just over the officers, and within a few feet of some of the officers. Commander Sartori now thought it time to heave to, and the frigate was brought up to the wind.

The Petrel let go a launch, and while the men were getting into it, to board the St. Lawrence —the distance from vessel to vessel being about 1700 yards—the ports of the "man-of-war" were suddenly opened, and the best part of a broadside belched forth death and destruction to the Petrel and a number on board of her.

A sixty-four pounder, with other guns loaded with solid shot, were pointed mid-ship, to take effect between wind and water. Other guns were loaded with large grape to sweep the decks.

The guns were well pointed by the engineer, and the next moment the desired object was attained. The loud and mighty roar, that might have awakened the Leviathan of the deep sea, startled, no doubt, the rebel crew. The deck of the Petrel was seen to bulge upward and forming a sort of spar or bridge, by the sudden sinking of the bow and stern, she sunk in that position, and the waters closed over the shattered wreck in about three minutes. Launches at once put out to save the survivors, if any, and thirty-six were picked up.

The commander of the rebel craft was Amasa Duval, of Georgia, formerly a Lieutenant in the United States Navy. He had on a uniform stolen from the United States Government, and it was altered to suit his present station as a commander in the rebel service. He was fast drowning, and on recognizing Commander Sartori, he sang out, as he was struggling between life and death, "Sartori, save me, for God's sake! Sartori, oh! save me, save me!" He was picked up, of course.—Phila. News.

ROCKET BATTERIES are suggested as a means to drive the rebels out of their masked retreats. Those used in the British service are propelled through a thick iron tube, the force being cut to bars a given distance, as in the case of a shell; to the rocket is attached a pole from eight to ten feet long, which coming in collision with any object, has the effect of starting the rocket in the opposite way; in the meantime the projectile is vomiting a perfect shot of liquid flame, lighting up every thing of an inflammable nature, while the dense smoke arising therefrom will cause the best disciplined soldiers their guns and fire in search of purer atmosphere. It finally terminates in a shell of the most destructive kind.

PILLOW'S MOVEMENTS.—The latest and most plausible theory of Pillow's movements is that he is striking at the land mines of that State for the purpose of establishing himself there, maintaining his communications with New Madrid, and supplying the rebel army with material for their bullets. It is known that Secessia is lamentably short of lead, and that the contract of supply are all cut off hence this theory has the merit of probability; but if the doughty Tennessean does not expend moramatal in gaining and holding his position then all his forces will be shiver to dig out of the earth, we are mistaken in the enemy and resources of Gen. Fremont.—Chicago Trib.

THE New Orleans Crescent, of the 25th ultimo, spoils the story set afloat by the Memphis Avalanche that fifty thousand stand of arms had reached there from England, having been landed at Berwick's Bay from the steamer Bermuda. It says there is no truth in it.

DR. BRECKENRIDGE.—The Trenton Gazette says:

"Charles Breckinridge, son of Rev. Dr. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, who was last year in the College of New Jersey, has been admitted in the school at West Point. Dr. Breckinridge visited Princeton a few days since, and expressed strong confidence that Kentucky will never go out of the Union, and that if by any unexpected movement her Legislature, about to be elected, should favor secession, the people will have civil war, and will fight the Union battle to the last; the popular voice, he says, is decidedly for the Union."

AMONG the rebels killed at Bull Run was a son of ex-Senator Norris, of New Hampshire, aged 27 years. Norris was clerk in the Post Office Department, and was retained by the present Administration. When the clerks were required to renew the oath of allegiance, Norris refused, and was discharged. He went to Virginia, joined the Beauregard Rifles, was appointed Lieutenant, and was killed in the late engagement. He was persuaded to turn traitor by a son of Gov. Ellis, of North Carolina. His mother and sisters reside in Washington. His father is dead.

THE military chest of the rebel General Garnett, which was captured by our troops, was found to consist of sheets of the unsigned notes of the Fairmount bank. The president of the bank accompanied Gen. Garnett, as one of his staff, signing such quantities of the notes as were wanted from time to time.

PRETTY PLAIN TALK.—A German paper in an article on the great panic that befel our army, says very strongly that "we had an army of Lions commanded by Jackasses."

Public Notices.

☞ A SOLDIER of the WAR of 1812, FOR ASSOCIATE JUDGE—LAURENCE MITCHELL, of Lawrenceville, formerly of the Fifth Ward, Pittsburgh.—

Fellow citizens of Allegheny county: Having at the request of many of my friends and fellow-citizens presented my name for your suffrages for the office of Associate Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, at the ensuing election, in October, I have determined, in view of the present distracted state of our beloved country, unhappily involved in civil war, to submit the consideration of my party, believing that the present occasion is one which calls on all good patriots to cast aside all mere party issues and to rally to the vital question of self preservation as a nation. While our brave volunteers, without distinction of party, have rushed to their families and homes, to aid in preserving to us all our liberties, I would be discordant with my sense of duty to present my name as a candidate to their persons, broth-ers and friends who remain at home, to fill the position I now hold as a trustee of the Union. In any other capacity I had the pleasure to serve under the command of Commodore Chauncey, on Lake Ontario; it was also my good fortune to be engaged in the vindication of the honor of our national flag and in repelling British aggression in the battles of Little York and Fort George.

I was also at the surrender of Fort Erie, on Lake Erie, opposite the present city of Buffalo, where about 600 British troops were taken prisoners by the American army under the command of Gens Brown and Winfield Scott, the present Commander-in-Chief of our Union armies.

I was then, and always have been, anxious that our flag should wave in glory over a free, happy and united people, and am convinced that the best way to secure the happy order of affairs which made our country the most prosperous on the face of the globe, and the asylum of the oppressed of every nation, is by allowing all minor party issues during the present contest, and joining as one man, heart and soul, in sustaining the efforts of the present Administration in its patriotic determination to support and sustain the Constitution and the laws over the whole land. It is my firm determination to do all in my power for the accomplishment of this object, and I therefore respectfully submit my name for your suffrages, subject to the decision of no Convention except one which may be assisted by THE PEOPLE, irrespective of party.

LAURENCE MITCHELL.
