PITTSBURGH: BATURDAY MORNING, SEPT. 14, 1861.

The Victory in Virginia writing the article on this subject which appeared in our paper of yesterday vening, we have taken a closer look at our maps, and come to a different conclusion to that then expressed.

So defective are all the maps, hitherto published, of Western Virginia, that it is imoult to trace the movements of our army at least there is generally some difficulty in getting the roads, rivers, and points of the compact, as indicated on the maps, to agree with those that we find in the telegraphic reports and in the letters of correlast, the same difficulty that has so fre-Quently before stood in our way again meets From the accounts we had before recolved, it was clear that Gen. Rescorans will have it in defiance of her impotent will.

"There may be Kentuckians, or creatures calling themselves Kestuckians, whom even these stinging insults and insolent threaft will not arouse in this exigency to drive out the invader, whose foot, now upon the soil of Kentucky, will soon, if not rep-lied, been turned by advancing on the direct road the most of the race of man."

The Appeal, however, grows bolder as it by the Governor. The Gazette says the resolutions will be signed by the Governor. The Gazette says: proceeds, and adds:

"We only speak the sentiment of the united South, we believe, in asserting that Kentucky can never be allowed to cast her desting with the North, whatever verious Pectucky can never be allowed to cast her desting with the North, whatever verious Pectucky can never be allowed to cast her desting with the North, whatever verious Pectucky can be a sentily range of the bayonet. While we respect State rights and State sovereignty, there are political and military necessities which override these rights as measures of retailsting, in a great revolution like the present, to the Basi of abolitionism, but the strong arm of our national power will resource the termination of the war as o retainly and as effectually as the vast expanse of our territory upon the golden coast of the Pacific was rescued from the hands of prestrate Maxico.
