

MONDAY MORNING, SEPT. 16, 1861.
Saratoga, N.Y.—A telegram from the Commandant of the Saratoga Army Barracks says: "The General-in-Chief has directed that Washington is not to be regarded as a regular town now, but is to be regarded as a regular fort." The Memphis "Bulldog," of Sept. 15, says: "In yesterday's "Bellotti" we gave some reasons why the clamor about the directory movements of our Potomac army should cease. The following extract of a letter to the Savannah "News" deals with the subject in a spirit manner: "The General-in-Chief has been harassed by the inactivity of the army. Much criticism has been piled upon Gen. Beauregard and those who are believed to direct the movements of the army, more particularly recent events, to occupy Atlanta and the West, and the City. Congress called for information on this point, and the President referred the inquiry to General Beauregard, who, in his answer, placed the blame where it really belonged. He is bound, for weeks past, to supply him with the material need to carry on the war—men, ammunition, provisions, wagons; but the Quartermaster and Commissary Departments being in independent control, day by day, of all the causes of our General's want of success in carrying the arm forward. Quite an arduous situation sprang up in the House upon the reading of this answer, in which Messrs. Miles and Conant, of South Carolina, were upon the floor of the House of Representatives, and had supported him in a most gallant manner during that eventful day, found it necessary vindicate their great chief from the aspersions which certain members were disposed to throw on his generalship. Since the 21st of July, many circumstances have combined to keep our troops in a stationary position. Rain has fallen in greater quantities and more frequently, rendering the roads impassable, hindering wagon teams, and making the bodies of troops and there has been a great deal of sickness among our soldiers—probably twenty per cent. are at this time unfit for duty. Our Generals, however, have been strengthened by the arrival every day, and weeks, of contingents to transport regiments after regiments."

Anathema About Jeff. Davis.

There is so much conflicting intelligence about the death of the rebel leader that V. F. felt it necessary to go to headquarters for information, and, all other reports to the contrary, from the sulphurous smell of the telegraph we are no doubt on the right score. The correspondence will explain itself.

New York, Sept. 5.

Draw Six.—As no body seems to know the whereabouts of Jeff. Davis just now, can you enlighten us? Yours,

VANITY FAIR.

John Ben Wood, Cliffe House, Niagara Falls, Canada.

Clifford House, 6 Sep. 6.

My Dear VANITY.—In reply to your of the 5th inst., as I was also very anxious about Jeff. I telegraphed below, and enclose my message and answer.

Yours, win or lose,

BEN WOOD.

[Parsons Telegraph Co., to Hades.]

CLIFFORD HOUSE, 5 Sep.

Any news of Jeff. Davis yet down there?

BEN WOOD.

To Old Scratch, Hades.

Hades.

Not come along yet. Expect him shortly. And see me soon yourself—bring Val and Burnett along.

On Sat.

As this is the very latest intelligence from a kindred spirit, we have every reason to believe it is to be relied upon—

(Vanity Fair).

DESTRUCTIVE IN A MANNER.—So destructive have been the ravages of insects in France the price is greatly reducing some of the most valuable, and that the subject has been brought prominently before the French Senate, in the shape of an elaborate report from a special committee. The secretaries of all the agricultural departments have agreed that the destruction of their hives with relentless gun for the sake of the moros of food to be plucked from the bones of the little "songsters," and have almost exterminated the scattered tribe in that country. The result is that the agricultural districts in all the agricultural districts are now in a state of complete desolation, and that the crops, till the government feels compelled to legislate for the correction of so great an evil. The arm of the law will doubtless interpose for the protection of the songsters, but it will take care to take care of themselves, even though, in procuring their own means of subsistence, they incidentally contributed an available service to their thoughts pursued. The French, it would appear, have a high esteem for their birds, but not of the right kind.

Books.

Francis Deak is called the Gavor of Hungary. He was the author of the address of the Hungarian Diet to the Emperor of Austria, which provoked Francis Joseph to a dissolution of the Diet; this dissolution itself called forth a protest, also from Deak's pen, the most forcible and eloquent of which was probably all the more forcible, as it was spoken through Hungarian. Deak is the son of a country gentleman, and is in his 56th year of his age; his eloquence is greater than Kosciusko's, and it gives him a broader and more commanding bearing. He is the author of the Hungarian Declaration of 43 forming part of Count Batthyany's ministry. He is so noted for his love of justice, that Aristides, he has received the epithet of "the just." His influence over the Hungarian people is still exercised, and it is exerted in favor of the independence of Hungary.

FINANCIAL TROUBLES IN VIRGINIA.—Every bank, every town and village corporation, even the State itself, and private bankers are doing all they can to meet the emergency. Gold and silver are easily bought at eight per cent. premium for these notes, and carefully hoarded away. Of course this currency never comes to be used, it will be brought up by those who have issued it at an enormous share—all of which will fall upon the people and end to the benefit of the corporation. So says the Paymeant's correspondent.

At the battle of Springfield, Mo., two gentlemen of African descent were cutting hemp near by. As soon as the artillerists began to fire, and ran for dear life, taking shelter under a scrub oak. Says Jim to Sam: "What's that?" "Don't know," says Sam: "spect it's the day of judgment." "I do," says Jim, "that's what they're all saying about de' peal ob de' Zouf Company. Guess that's it." "Well, golly, guess that's com' in' up, and they conclude to awl development.
