AT ADVECTIBING AT BRASONABLE BATES PITTSBURGH:

FRIDAY MORNING, SEPT. 20, 1861. The Voice of the Democracy in Phila-

The democrats of Philadelphia, it is well known, have refused to join in a "Union" movement with the Republicane, because, as they frankly say, they think they can elect an out-and-out democratic ticket. You ing in a "Union" or "no party" movement except where they are in a minority. Where they have everything to gain and nothing to lose, such movements are all right, with them; but where they have anything to lose, and the party in and promptly valoomed. But, on the other hand, it should be remembered that his task them; but where they have anything to lose, and the party in the sick south. [Philadelphia Bulletin.] they are all wrong! It is "heads I win, tails you lose," with them, in every instance-Here, where they are in a hopeless minority, they are very anxious to forget party; oh, Berke, and Montgomery, and Greene, and in every other democratic county, they insolently plap the doors in Republican faces and tell them to stand off! it is the democracy, only, who can save the country. Here, for example, is the resolution of the democrats of Philadelphia. Resolved, That this Convention pledge the Democracy to sustain the Government of the United States and its officers in all constitutional acts in carrying on the war against rebellion, secession and treason; as a consequence the peace, unity, stability and the permanency of the Union of these and the permanency of the flag over States, the covereignty of the flag over States and Territories; the undisputed su-premery of the laws and the great glory a common and united country can only be saintained, secured and perpetuated by the of its principles

There are two things notable in this resolation. The first in that they qualify their support of the Government, pledging themselves to sustain the government only in in all its Constitutional acts involves a pledge to support all its acts, because we contend that all its acts are constitutional; but the democrate put that word in as a saving clause, reserving to themselves the right to carp at the suppression of the writ of habeas corpus, the suppression of rebel presses, the calling out of the three-years volunteers, and other acts as unconstitutional. No true patriot, at such a time as this, thinks of qualifying his support of the government in any way.

The according to the suppression of the government in any way.

If admits that in letters to the President and to a member of the Cabinet, (which one Gen. Fremont with inefficiency, the improper use of public money, and making himself inaccessible not only to the public, but to men of high position and character, who had important business with him, and yet have had to leave St. Louis without fuludience of him."

"It is true," says the Tribune, "that these the army regulations; but it should not be in them we see abundant promise of sure forgotten, in justification of Col. Blair, results-results sure to come in good time. that he is not merely the commander of a regiment of Missouri volunteers, but a sidered and as fully appreciated, as the prominent diatesman, and in that capacity rest of us, the advantages of a flank attack he has no doubt kept up since the arrival of Gen. Premont at St. Louis."

Regarding the charges themselves, the writer says that the inefficiency complained of "arises solely from the fast that the Major General has not been able to accomplish what he intended when he assumed command at St. Louis. But this is not due to Fremont's command, for gerrice elsewhere. any fault of his, but to the fact that the exigencies of the public service have compelled the Government to interpose hindrances to movements that he had prepared, and from which large results might have been expected. Thus arms on which he had counted have been turned away from their destination and put to other uses; and on one occasion when he was all ready for a blow of great importance, two bodies of troops, more than 10,000 in number, had to be detained elsewhere or ordered off for Bervice in other departments, and a brilliant decision that slaves are contraband of war, has been repeated within a few days—past.

Under such circumstances it is manifestly
Impossible that be should undertake any enterprise of great moment; but we may now

But in Philadelphia, and the immediate duties of his office, the national interests must have suffered in conse quence. But, admitting the fault to the full extent in which we have seen it imputed, we submit that it is a venial, if not a trifling one, and is not to be weighed in comparison with the genius and services of the General. From men of the force of character, originality of mind, and capacity to command, which are required in such a position as his, we cannot always count on the gentle graces and amiable courtesies which lend a charm to the refinements and the intarcourse of peaceful society." More important still is the last paragraph which refers to the current rumors of the probable resignation of Gen. Fremont. We trust the writer has both the necessary knowledge and authority to say, as he does: part of the public by stating that there is not the slightest probability of Gen. Fremont's resigning his commission. He is there to serve his country, and, no matter by what inconveniences circumstances may --- Finally, let us compose all anxiety on the
