TUESDAY MORNING, NOV. 12, 1861.

Configuration of What depth and the Employed the following from the Employed th pire of Sydney: Most people whose memsame day on which Mrs. G— died, and sery carries them back for a quarter of a century, will remember the leading features of an extraordinary crime which took place.

I have said all that I feel at liberty to in London, about the commencement of in London, about the commencement of divulge of a story which willlever haunt the year 1837, and which probably excited my memory. in the public mind as great a degree of horror as any deed of guilt ever committed in the metropolis. I allude to the murder by Greenacre of Mrs. Brown, a woman to by Greenacre of Mrs. Brown, a woman to whom he was to have been married on the day following that on which he perpetrated the atrocious offence for which he justily paid the penalty of his worthless life. Some of the circumstances were so horribly groce them from the memory of those who then became acquainted with them. Greenacre, it was proved at the trink, completely dismembered the body of the unfortunate Mrs.

Brown, and, after disposing of the trunk and limbs in various places, actually rode about London in cabs and omnibuses, for two or three days, with the head under his arm, wrapped in a silk handkerchiel—telling those friends and acquaintances who happened to juquire as to the contents of a bandle ha was so careful of, that it was only a cabbago!

Of the marderer himself, and of the particulars of his trial and execution, I shall here say nothing. The plantance which has the residence of it, and who was bis paramour and accomplices, who assisted him, if notine and accomplices, who assisted him, if notine and accomplice, who assisted him, if notine and accomplice, who assisted him, if notine actual marder, at least to conceal the evidence of it, and who was to have shared the proman alluded to, became, if prossible, an woman alluded to, became, if possible, an the program of the profession of the profession and alluded to, became, if prossible, an the program of the profession and alluded to, became, if prossible, an the woman alluded to, became, if prossible, and the profession of the profession the profess thom he was to have been married on the wretched woman who was one of the second of the actual murder, at least to conceal the evidence of it, and who was to have shared the proceeds of his guilt. Sarah Gale, the woman alluded to, became, if possible, an object of greater execration than the murding of the second of the deter himself. She was admitted on the trial to give evidence against him, and by this means to preserve her worthless life for the fate which beled her many years afterwards in the far interior of this country. It will perhaps be necessary to explain that at the time of the morder of Mrs. Brown the first most of GEO. D. Bigs. W. ABNK. crime of horror with the details of which I had ever been made acquainted; and that the impression left on my youthful mind was of a vivid and painful nature. In the year 1858 I was residing in a remote part of this colony. I did not regularly follow my profession as a means of livelihood; indeed, the population was much foo scattered, and far too healthy, to induce a medical man to remain there. When, howof this colony. I did not regularly follow my profession as a means of livelihood; indeed, the population was much too scattered, and far too healthy, to induce a medical man to remain there. quiry, I found I was required, at a distance of some sixty miles, to attend a woman who had been thrown from her horse against a tree. The messenger informed me that if I made haste and could save the patient, I should be handsomely rewarded, as she was wery rich, having some thousands of cattle and stations half as big as England itself; that fresh horses would meet us, and that if I rode well, we could do the distance in
