TRUESDAY MORNING, DEC 12 1851.

The configuration of the Shaves of Registery of the Shaves of Registery of the Shaves of Shave ment of the troops at Washington. The pect before the civilized world, to level it correspondent of the New York Evening blows upon the rebels in their weakest and but I had another reason in the seeming nog-

The political interests of the country, Mr. Holt writes, demand more active work y the government troops. This is the tory told by almost all Kentucky and Tennessee men now here: They assert that it will be impossible to keep up the public sentiment in either of those states to the right pitch in favor of the government un-is there a sufficient consideration of the loss of life caused by a protracted inactivity in camp, in nearly one position, thus engendering camp fevers and despondency among the men?"

On this subject we are surprised to see the New York World raising the onward cry. That paper has been bitter in its denunciation of the Tribune for its "Onward to Bichmond" cry, and has recommended the most implicit reliance on the judgment of the commanders, but now it talks in the following strain: that delay is inadmissible a single day beyand what military considerations rigor-ously exact. It cannot be indulged in without great injury and greater danger. The confederacy gains heart and prestige every hour it is able, to keep our great armies at bay. It attributes our failure to attack to fear, and its adherents are correspondingly inspirited. Foreign nations, too take the failure as evidence that the confederates have great strength—a strength that must altimately secure their independence. Our very inactivity is doing more than even an occasional defeat could, to impel them to a foregome conclusion. Moreover there is fearful danger that protracted delay will breed political distraction. We are already seeing tokens of this in the growing differences on the negro question. A strong party is rising for sweeping abolition, and they are effectively pressing the argument of military necessity into their service, in default of successful war in any other form. This is giving them a prodigvice, in derains of successful was a prodig-orther form. This is giving them a prodig-ious advantage. If our Generals have it in their power to demonstrate, as we bein their. Power to demonstrate, as we believe they have, that there is no such military necessity, it is high time they should be about it. Their prolonged inaction through the winter will be unavoitably taken as a tacif confession that the work in hand is beyond the strength of their armies. Whether it be true or not, the majority of the people will so construe it; and when the people are once transitions. the people will so construe it; and when the people are once so satisfied, nothing on earth will stay them from the extreme reearth will stay them from the extreme resort of arming the slaves,—for there is mothing they are not prepared for, sooner than yield to this infernal rebellion. Every man, then, who longs for the restoration of the Constitution as it was, has an interest in the speedy action of our commanders in the speedy action of our commanders in the field. What that action shall be, we do not presume to indicate. Military science must alone determine that. But action in some direction must be had. We cannot conceive that with decent Generalship any action can lead to defeat. But if there be risk, the risk must be incurred. Any risk is better than the sure evil that must come from inaction."

In the first place, General McClellan has the reputation of being a good and houest soldier, who knows his duties and his place, the property of the

It is quite evident that a little more energy at Port Royal would have produced greater results. If there had been a rapid advance lowards Charleston or Savannah, the terror created by the loosened slaves, would have given us those places, with probably little or no opposition, as they were nearly defenseless. The time to strike an effective blow has been suffered to—pass, and the terror just created by the expedition not being improved, a reaction has taken place, and all the moral effects it was intended to produce are lost.

In Kentucky the Union men are complaining bitterly of the dilatory movements in that quarter. Mr. Hour writes that the rocity as it possibly can be by the rebels. in that quarter. Mr. Holl writes that the It will not make a particle of difference to loyal people there are sick at heart waiting them what Congress does with slavery, but for the onward movement of the troops. it is believed it will greatly strengthen the Mr. Holr also asks for an onward move- Government and place it in a better as-

Even Brigadier-Generals and Colombia letter, alluded to above, was communicated to him, and he avowed his opinion to feely that Mr. Holt was right. He also stated that he had frequently expressed this opinion to General McClellan—It is well known in government circles here that the President and Socretary, Cameron favor an early advance of our troops. course, subsists as long as it can escape 'modi favor an early advance of our troops.

General McClellan admits the propriety of such a movement, and only asks that he may select his own time for it, as he will be guided solely by a desire to save life and make victory nearly certain.

That brief interview satisfied Platte county, and the country.

FUGITIVE BLACKS IN WASHINGTON .-There are seventy fugitive slaves at the Washington Navy Yard. They have all been comfortably provided for by Secretary Welles, and most of them are working for a compensation of $10 a month. Marshal Lamon reports to the Senate that the imprisonment of slaves in the government jail in this city was in strict accordance with the laws of the District o 'olumbia.

Gen. Hunter, has, however, adopted a different and more decided policy towards the rebels in that quartor, who have been allowed to run riot under Col. Smith's very nose. The Conservative says:

There has been no forward movement of any kind; and the only stir visible has been in getting Gen. Viel's brigade ready to disembark upon some expedition further down the coast. Where it is to go is not known; but it is generally supposed that Brunswick, Georgia, and Fernandina in Florida, are the points to be occupied. Fort. Pulseki, now in the hands of the rebelf and I presume it is the intention to surround that fortification with the gun boats and reduce it by cutting off supplies from its inmates. For several days past we have heard heavy cannonading in that direction, the commander of the fort seizing every opportunity to fire upon our men on the island, and on the gun boats, as they approach.

The march of events is slow, you will see; but I have no doubt the purpose is to occupy Savannah, Brunswick and Fernandina, as some as possible, and have as little doubt that what is purposed will be accomplished.

We hear but little of the movements of the enemy. There is a report that 25,000 men are concentrated, or are concentrating, at a point in the interior, about 150 miles from here, with the intent of recapturing the island, and it is not improbable that such may be the case. As to recapturing the island, however, they can't do it, you know.

All hands have been at work in the trenches for two weeks past, throwing up a formidable intrenchment. These earthworks entirely surround the camps of the three brigades. Beginning at a point on the sea shore, a mile below the central headquarters, they extend in a semi-circle to another point on the coast, a mile above the headquarters, the furthest point inland being about a mile back from the coast. They are encircled by a wide ditch, and the height, from the bottom of the ditch to the creat, of the embankment, is twelve feet. The construction has been superintended by the Engineers of the regular army, and the work was laid out by them. The general form, as I have said, is that of a semi-circle, but in detail it corresponds to the outlines of all regular fortifications of the kind, The guns have not yet been mounted upon the flanks designed for them, but will be shortly; and then Gen.
