WOOLEN HOODS, awaiting the result of an interchange of many old friends, and admire the evergreen adorments of the camps—the streets between the tents being regularly planted with pines and cedars, and all the main entrances to the camp arched and garlanded in honor of the presentation!

Most of the men in camp have adopted the plan of building up logs three or four feet, chunking and daubing them well, and then set the wedge shape tent over as a roof; it is warm, and gives good ventilation, and when aided by an open fireplace is both saug and cheerfal. Some of the German companies in the brigade, I notice, dig down three or four feet in the ground, and wall it up with logs, and set the tont over it. It is not a good idea—though warm, it must necessarily be damp. Many of the officers in the 13th have crected log cabins, which seem very comfortable; but from a difficulty in procuring sush, they are not as light as they should be.

A few days ago, one of the mess had the mistortune to mistake powdered enery for black popper, and used it very liberally, which shows the necessity of having the quarters well lit up. The effect might have been most disastrous, but the surgeon, with great presence of mind, mansged, with great difficulty to procure a quantity of old rye whisky, which happily produced a noutralizing effect. He was obliged to administer the remedy in such a quantity, that the sufferers were readered insensible, and remained so for many hours; but have felt no permanent inconvenience thereford, and seem to be doing welling the location of the camp, is an unique the location of the camp, is an unique and the composition in the Tank, in the mornings, which arises, probably, from the camp being high, and the heavy fall of mountain day in the evenings.
