der the flag of a Foreign Power. This is the "right of asylum," the sacredness of which has always been maintained by the American Government—even with more unawerving energy and consistency than any other nation. We have, under all circumstances, and against all odds, insisted on the strict observance of the law which guarantees this "right of asylum."

Here is the severest test of the sincerity and consistency of ohr Government in carrying out their principles, when applied against themselves, that has ever yet been encountered in our history. England has had the angracious part of Shylock to perform in this drams of diplomacy; but while she insists, in the terms of the bond, on her "pound of flesh"—well she must see that even in getting all she can or dare devented the received in this city from such authority in Nassau, N.P.; as leaves not the slightest room to doubtits perfect accuracy, statessome interesting facts. The steamer Ella Manly, late the 15-abel, had recently arrived from Charleston, direct, bringing 1,000 bales of cotton, which she was discharging. On the morning the letter was written, the 10th inst, the steamer Theodora had again come in from Charleston, bringing also a cargo of cotton, which she also was landing. The day, before, the British steamer Gladiator arrived from London, deeply laden with arms and ammunition, desined for the Southern Statés. It may, perhaps, be asked—how is and Theodora get out? But this is one side that even in getting all she can or dare devented in this city from such authority in Nassau, N.P.; as leaves not the slightest room to doubtits perfect accuracy, states some interesting facts. Of course, in coming to this determination, the relative gain and loss, the convenience and inconvenience—in a word, both sides of the account were summed up and considered. The difficulties in the way of exchanging prisoners were the first obvious disadvantages of the position of the government. These have been got over to some extent, and the Generals have been permitted, in an informal way, to make exchanges of prisoners: but still the inconvenience in some independent of the constitution and threaten to shoot whom the convenience in the way of exchanging prisoners were the first obvious disadvantages of the position of the government. The recent fire at Charleston, full details of which appear in the Courier of the 16th inst., is even more calamitous and destructive than it was at first supposed to be. The aggregate loss of property in buildings, goods, &c., is almost incredible. The Courier roughly estimates it at not less than ten millions of dollars, on which the insurance was comparatively limited. Most of the policies were in Charleston, Augusta, Savannah and other Southern companies, many of which will be unable to pay one-fourth the amount incurred. There is also considerable insurance in Northern companies, which, under existing difficulties, is not expected to be paid.
