TUESDAY MORNING, DEC. 31, 1861.

Settlement of the Trent Difficulty.

We present this morning the entire official correspondence in relation to the seizure of MASON and SLIDELL and their Secretaries, on board the British mail steamer Trent. We confess that, after a careful reading of the arguments of Mr. SEWARD, we have not felt that entire satisfaction that we could have desired. He seems to have presented the best argument he could, to his own country, for doing an act which was a necessity, to preserve us from a war with England at a time when such a war would have been a struggle for our very existence. He decides all the main positions of the case in our favor, to wit: That the persons seized were contraband; that Capt. WILKES did lawfully stop and search the Trent for contraband persons and dispatches; that he exercised that right in a lawful and proper manner; that having found the contraband persons and their dispatches, he had a right to capture them. The only question he decides against us is, that Capt. WILKES did not exercise the rights of capture in accordance with the laws of nations, by not bringing the Trent into our ports, and thus subjecting the legality of the capture to the decisions of the admiralty courts, where Great Britain would have been heard in defense of her rights. Mr. SEWARD admits that the rights of persons could not have been considered in these courts, which adjudicate the rights of property simply, but he thinks that would have been better than no adjudication at all; that imperfect as the existing judicial remedy is, it is better than leaving it with the captor to decide on the deck of a ship, and thus involve all the dangers of a war.

If we admit this is a good ground on our part for conceding the British demand, are we certain that it will be so considered by that Government? Would they have not made the same demand had the Trent been brought in? The British Government will be too well pleased with our recognition of her demands, to care much about the reasons for so doing on our part. That condemns ourselves. Yet it is a pertinent inquiry—does the British Government recognize the grounds of Mr. SEWARD's decision? Because if it does not, and one of our naval officers should act upon it, we might hereafter be involved in a war on a similar occasion, where the vessel was brought in, unless we made further concessions.

All the precedents set by Great Britain were against her in this controversy. She has exercised the asserted right of boarding our vessels, of ordering all the sailors to be paraded on deck, and of forcibly removing all who could be identified as British subjects—that is, born on her soil. It was no difference whether the person claimed wished to expatriate himself or not, he was forcibly removed and compelled to serve under the British flag. True, our country has always resisted this claim, but so far the British Government has never relinquished it, although she has ceased to act upon it of late years, and would not be permitted to do so by our Government. If we consider the present arrangement as deciding the question at issue on the grounds always contended for by our Government, so much has been gained.

Mr. SEWARD was justified in avoiding a war with England at this time, by any concession short of national dishonor. We think he has succeeded in this worthy object, and the nation will be grateful to him for it, although there will be differences of opinion as to the grounds upon which the matter is placed. We all rejoice that England is foiled in her object of forcing us into war when she would have held us at a disadvantage, but the American people will remember her ungenerous treatment when we can meet her single handed. Not that we would advocate, as some have done, that we should open an old sore, mutually healed, even although we were badly treated, but that we will not feel bound to yield her any advantage, or extend to her any forbearance because of the numerous ties which have hitherto bound us to each other. By her shabby treatment of us, in this the time of our peril, when we ought to have received from her the utmost sympathy and forbearance, she has expunged all claims upon our good fellowship, and may expect to have meted out to her what she has imposed upon us. Let her go on her ways. We will go on ours, and hold her to a strict accountability in the day of our strength, and to a strict observance of the precedent she has enforced upon us.

—Of course, our understanding of the question is founded solely on the published documents. It is reasonable, and very probable, that Mr. SEWARD has other reasons than those which appear in print, for placing the ground of the surrender, on the simple fact of the Trent not being brought in. He may have grounds for knowing or believing that this is to be a precedent for the government of all future cases of a similar character. If so, a great object will be gained in the settlement of international rights on a question more likely than any other to lead to national quarrels.

The Present Situation.

Foreign affairs, spite of all our recent interest in the discussion of them, ought now to be most resolutely thrust aside, as being very foreign, in fact as well as in name, to the duty of the hour. That one duty, which excludes for the present every other, is with all diligence, undivided attention and singleness of aim, completing all our preparations at the earliest hour, and hastening forward, as soon as our preparations are made complete, to crush out of existence the armies, congresses, presidents and all other heads, members and appurtenances of this foul rebellion and conspiracy of the slave-lords and oligarchs of the South. We trust that we do not misinterpret certain signs which seem to us to indicate that the hour of action is nigh. A western contemporary thus refers to the advanced state of our preparations, and what they portend:

"If we are not much mistaken, it will soon appear that there has not been any intention, on the part of our Government, of permitting the army to subside into winter quarters, without making a general effort to crush the military power of the enemy. The gunboat fleet, at Cairo, will soon be in complete condition, and that an attack upon Columbus will follow, is regarded as a fixed fact. The bridge over Green river will be completed this week; and the march of our army of Central Kentucky, upon Bowling Green, will certainly follow. There is a most serious movement on the Upper Potomac. That an advance upon Winchester is contemplated, is well known. Gen. Reynolds will advance from Romney with near twelve thousand men, and an expedition from Williamsburg will co-operate with him. Gen. Banks is also looking toward Winchester, and the movements of his columns are significant of action in that direction. Of course, if the right wing of our army of the Potomac engages in active service, the centre and left wing will not be unoccupied, as it will be necessary to prevent the enemy from throwing the weight of his force to his left wing. Gen. Burnside's expedition will be under way, if it has no bad luck, about the last of this week; and this expedition, it is believed, is associated with an advance on the Lower Potomac. Our army in South Carolina has been reinforced until it is now nearly twenty thousand strong, and, having fortified, it is ready to go forward. There appears to be unity of design in the military and naval preparations going forward, and there is reason to hope that there will be an assault upon the enemy along the whole line of their defences. If our success should be as great as the extent of our preparations and the amount of force wielded, warrant us in expecting, the military power of the rebellion will be broken, and then we shall see whether a political revolution will take place in the South, or whether a bloody and remorseless revolutionary struggle will be insisted upon."

Mexican Affairs.

It has been stated that Mr. CORWIN had concluded a treaty with Mexico, and that it was before the Senate for ratification. This is incorrect, according to late advices. No treaty has been entered into, and none is before the Senate. Mr. CORWIN framed a treaty, which he understood would be acceptable to the Mexican and British Governments, in which he proposed to pay, or guaranteed to be paid by our government, the interest on the English debt for five years, and thus withdraw England from the tripartite treaty to coerce Mexico. The Mexican Congress rejected the treaty, and it was afterwards ascertained that the British Government was averse to it. Having failed in his efforts, Mr. CORWIN forwarded all the papers to his Government, and asked instructions for his future guidance. The State Department, not willing to take the whole responsibility, has laid the papers before the Senate, which gave rise to the rumor that a treaty had been made. It is understood that the Chairman of the Committee of Foreign Affairs, is averse to taking any action in the matter, and the allies will doubtless be allowed to carry out their schemes in Mexico, except such as may arise out of complications among themselves.

On the arrival of Miramon in New York some days ago, he was telegraphed by the Spanish Minister to come to Washington. Miramon came, and remained two days, when he returned to New York and took passage in the Spanish steamer Noe Daque, which sailed from that port for Havana the 25th inst. The plan is for Miramon to return to Mexico, to gather the fragments of the Church Party in Mexico, which shall co-operate with the Spanish forces, establish a Provisional Government with Miramon at the head, and then in due course of time the schemes of Spain for conquest and a monarchy, it is thought, will be fully carried out.

Suspension of Eastern Banks.

We learn that the New York, Boston and Philadelphia Banks have, this morning, suspended specie payment. We presume this will necessarily compel a suspension of specie payments by the banks throughout the country generally.

While we regret the necessity for such a step, and had hoped that the abundance of specie in our banks, with the constant receipts both from California and Europe would have rendered such a prudential course unnecessary, yet we do not see any cause for a money panic, as a consequence. The result of suspension will be a greater ease in the money market, and an extension of discounts. Exchange cannot be seriously affected. The enormous specie reserve still in the vaults of our banks will, no doubt, be dedicated to the support of the Government, and the vast disbursements of specie, on Government account, will more than compensate for the loss of specie payments by the banks.

—Since the above was written we learn that the bank of PITTSBURGH, the IRON CITY Bank and the MECHANIC'S Bank of this city, have resolved not to suspend, but will continue the payment of specie as usual. So the holders of the notes of these banks need have no apprehension of not getting specie, as long as they can get the notes.

The Trent Affair.

We give nearly all our available space to-day to the official correspondence between our Government and Great Britain, in relation to the affair of the Trent. It was impossible to present a synopsis which would have done justice to Mr. SEWARD; and we presume our readers would not be satisfied with any thing short of the whole argument, in a case touching so closely on the national honor. Happily there is no news of pressing interest, nothing of any thing like the intrinsic importance of this correspondence to the people.

The Army on Green River.

We are glad to hear favorable accounts of the condition of the army on Green river. It is reported to be quite rapidly advancing in drill and serviceable condition. The building of a bridge over Green river is only a small part of the great work that is going on. Gen. Mitchel is laboring with characteristic zeal with his Brigade. The artillerists are busily practising, and the rawest of them are rapidly becoming proficient. The whole army is well clothed, well armed, and well fed. The horses, even, are well cared for, having plenty of forage, and being generally in good condition. The army will be able, after the construction of the Green river bridge, to move forward to Bowling Green without waiting for the railroad to be rebuilt. Supplies can be wagoned from Green river to that point.—Cincinnati Commercial.

TO HORSE OWNERS—DR. SWEET'S INFALLIBLE LINIMENT FOR HORSES is unrivalled by any; in all cases of Lameness, arising from Sprains, Bruises, or Wrenching, its effect is magical and certain. Harness or Saddle Galls, Scratches, Mange, &c., it will also cure speedily. Spavin and Ringbone may easily be prevented and cured in their incipient stages, but confirmed cases are beyond the possibility of a radical cure. No case of the kind, however, is so desperate or hopeless but it may be alleviated by this Liniment, and its faithful application will always remove the lameness and enable the horse to travel with comparative ease.
