

Pittsburgh Gazette

FRIDAY MORNING, JAN. 8, 1862.

Republican City Ticket.
FOR MAYOR,
H. C. SAWYER, Jr.
FOR COUNSELLOR,
JOHN McCARGO.
FOR TREASURER,
WILLIAM EICHBAUM.

The City Election.

We rejoice in this theme because we fear our political friends in the city do not realize as fully as they should the necessity of uniting their numbers.

The basis of two years, in politics, is apt to tell many political elections. It will not be amiss, therefore, to remind our readers of the state of things two years ago, and recall to their remembrance some of the facts which then transpired.

The Republican primary election resulted, at that time, in the choice of delegates from four wards in favor of Mr. Sawyer, our present nominee, four in favor of Mr. Wilson, our present Mayor, and a set of six delegates from other wards of the nine into which the city is divided. The result, when the Convention met, was a split. Two Conventions organized, one of which nominated Mr. Wilson, and the other presented Mr. Sawyer. Things remained in this way for a week or two; the party being hopelessly divided.

In the meantime those Democrats who are now so loudly clamoring for a "no-party" organization, oblivious to the arguments which now control them, called a Democratic Convention and nominated a Democratic candidate. There was a splendid chance, as they thought, for a pure Democratic victory, and with a keen scent for the spoils they rushed forward to what seemed a certain political triumph. To these fellows talk now, you would hardly suppose that, only two years since, they were vigorously supporting party candidates. But then, you see, there was a chance to succeed, which does not now exist.

In this emergency, when the defeat of our party seemed certain, Mr. Sawyer, looking only to the interests of the organization with which he was politically connected, and which was then upon the eve of entering upon the Presidential campaign, forgot all his personal claims, magnanimously withdrew, leaving the field clear to Mayor Wilson, who was triumphantly elected. It was a noble, manly act, and the party in this way, could do an ignoble thing to itself by deserting it.

I know that, at the time, there was a grateful acknowledgment of this magnanimous course of Mr. Sawyer, and hundreds of those who had opposed him, manifested a determination to stand firmly by him when it came his turn to be supported. That time has now come, and he deserves those men to redeem their promises with a will. It would be a burning shame if he who sacrificed all his own claims to save the party should, now, when he has been honorably nominated, fail to be sustained. He deserves the support of every Republican in the city, and, we trust he will receive it.

The Port Royal Sherman.

This General is severely criticized in various quarters. Writing to a United States Senator, it is said, he declares the time has not arrived for invading South Carolina, always within our lines. A proclamation to that effect would have brought in 25,000 in three days. Two months hence, however, such a course may be proposed. Probably he hopes that it will be made the necessity of doing it. We incline to the opinion that he will lack the opportunity, if he waits two months.

Mr. Braxton, the correspondent of the London Times, in a late letter utters the following criticism:

"To my mind there has been by no means such a display of energy as might have been expected from regularly trained officers, especially in connection with the attack on the works. It is difficult to conceive why they did not make an attempt to capture the fort, as they did when they were retreating over the river, when they were separating the islands they occupied from other islands adjacent to the fort, so as to cut off its supplies and render it incapable of resistance. Why go to this trouble, and then bridge the river? What was the object of the bridge? I can only conceive that it was to facilitate the passage of the rebels across the river, and to enable them to reach the fort by land.

"The rebels, however, in one single street, are spanned a few miles before fort, by long, trestle bridges, established; but the enemy have been compelled to retreat, and the bridge has been demolished.

From Minnesota.

A special dispatch from St. Louis to the Chicago Tribune, dated December 31st, says:

"An officer attached to Major-General H. W. Hurlbut's division, having come in a hasty to St. Louis to Herman. He was arrested there, and held in confinement. He had dispatched a telegram to General Halleck, from his temporary headquarters, in which he gave his reasons for General Halleck's refusal to give him command of the troops in the West, and the military departments maintained in the West, using in their transmission and communiques, language which was as bad as that of the first.

The rebels, however, in one single street, are spanned a few miles before fort, by long, trestle bridges, established; but the enemy have been compelled to retreat, and the bridge has been demolished.

Agreeing in the main with the public, unquestionably, in the comparative influence of forces.

It is most true saying in matters, to wit: "Some to gain success." There is no want of energy and determination to do great things—very determinable and very fateful to our cause. It will be inspiring to witness great deeds done generally, growing at the Chicago Tribune says:

"We have this lack of want of energy and determination to do great things. The list will be published in our columns, and our soldiers, plaining in the ranks, will be inspired to emulate great deeds done generally, growing at the Chicago Tribune says:

"We have this lack of want of energy and determination to do great things. The list will be published in our columns, and our soldiers, plaining in the ranks, will be inspired to emulate great deeds done generally, growing at the Chicago Tribune says:

"The New York Evening Post says: "The Sherman expedition seems likely to be one of the most wretched failures of the war." It says:

"The gallant attack of the army, the force to which all appears, to stand alone, will be repaid by any corresponding deed. It had to be done, and seven weeks after those successes, Dupont closed the way for General Sherman and his troops; those have been reports of projected movements by almost every steamer which has arrived from Fort Royal since, but hitherto no operations of importance have been begun. It is very certain now that a thousand men might have taken Charleston and its ramparts from Fort Royal without a blow, after the fall of the rebel fort. The panic of the South, however, ought to have been of use to us; but they had not time to recover from their fright, and indeed, when seven weeks Sherman had given them, the rebels had armed and drilled the whites and the blacks to oppose our march; they had had time to supply us, we ought to have prepared, and we ought to have secured, and strengthened the defenses of all important points."

"We ought to throw away the fruit of our initial victory in this way. Our general must have piled up their successes, or else we shall be unable to sustain our glorious efforts of our army and navy as far as the Port Royal."

Reports by a Rebel Deserter.

Last week an intelligent Irish deserter from Fort Pulaski reached the Union camp on Tybee Island.

"The rebels are still encamped near Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near the critical time is now on the car of the South. In the port was sailing northward on Saturday morning, when the rebels opened fire on her, and she became the prey of stormy rage. We venture to say there has not been so much "weeping and gnashing of teeth" in Georgia since the fall of Atlanta. The Trent affair had been settled was dashed over the wires.—Albion Evening Journal.

Reports by a Rebel Deserter.

Last week an intelligent Irish deserter from Fort Pulaski reached the Union camp on Tybee Island.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.

"The rebels are still encamped near

Savannah, around which city several fortifications are erected. The troops there are armed and drilled, and have a number of horses. They have plenty of powder, but the possibility of a radical change in their position is not to be despised. It may be alleviated by the arrival of winter, but it may be aggravated by the want of supplies, which always remove the lances and enable the rebels to attack."

For sale by J. SIMON JOHNSTON, 8th April.