MONDAY MORNING, JAN. 20, 1862.

The Situation at the Close of last Week.

At the close of the previous week there was a confident expectation of exciting events in various quarters. The Burnside expedition was about to sail, and it was supposed its destination was some point in Virginia, and of course the result would be immediately known. The Cairo expedition it was reported had started, and a battle near or at Columbus was looked for early in the week. Gen. BUELL it was supposed would march on Bowling Green, and prevent Hardee from aiding Polk at Columbus. There were rumors also of an advance on the Potomac.

These expectations have not been realized. The Burnside expedition sailed, but went out to sea, the expedition at Cairo had not started, as was supposed—but preliminaries for a start were being arranged, and consequently there has been no fighting at Columbus or Bowling Green, so far as we are advised at this present writing.

Nevertheless, the week has been an exciting and an eventful one. The great event of the week has been the change in the Cabinet. This took the country by surprise, and gave rise to much surmise and some alarm, and to a great deal of newspaper comment.

The situation at the close of the week is rather encouraging than otherwise. Mr. STANTON has been confirmed as Secretary of War, and Mr. CAMERON as Minister to Russia. Upon the whole, now that the fog has cleared away, and the excitement, caused by the suddenness of the change, has subsided, the country is satisfied with the change. Mr. CAMERON's friends cheerfully acquiesce in his retirement. Numerous frauds had come to light in the contracting department, which needed ventilating and exposing, and a new man could probably perform this work better than Mr. CAMERON, who has doubtless been imposed upon by friends whom he trusted.

Mr. STANTON's appointment meets with general acceptance. He is known to be a bitter foe to the rebellion, and a man of indomitable will and energy, and it is believed that he will go to work to crush out the rebellion, without regard to the consequences to the rebels themselves. The earnest Republican papers express as much satisfaction with the appointment as the most conservative journals in the country. As all loyal men want the rebellion put down with a strong hand, they acquiesce in the appointment; and from Mr. STANTON's antecedents and well known character, it is generally conceded, that if slavery stands in the way of the overthrow of the rebellion, he will not scruple to crush out slavery with the rebellion. It will not be long before all men will come to the conclusion that slavery is the main prop of the rebellion. Knock away the prop, and the rebellion falls.

As regards military affairs, there is prospect of stirring events at hand. The Burnside Expedition has struck a blow somewhere, and we may look for news from Pamlico or Albermarle Sounds, or probably from both of them, daily. From Cairo, our latest news is that Gen. GRANT has marched with a strong force, most probably to attack Columbus in the rear, or to cut off its supplies, while the gunboats are ready to co-operate in front. We have no intelligence from Gen. BUELL. He is doubtless ready to do his part.

As to the situation of affairs on the Potomac, we have not much information. All the light we can get points to an early forward movement—in fact it is believed by some that the army has advanced. Be this as it may, we do not believe MCCLELLAN intends to be idle after he has set in motion the western and southern expeditions.

Another aspect of the situation, and an encouraging one, is that the financial affairs of the Government have been arranged on a basis which appears to give general satisfaction, and the dangers which threatened the Treasury at the beginning of the week, have passed. Restored confidence, and the resolute determination of the people to submit to all the taxation necessary to sustain the Government in crushing the rebellion, has given a more cheerful aspect to the financial affairs of the country.

Upon the whole, then, we close the week with cheerfulness and courage. All that is wanting to overthrow the accursed rebellion is the perfect union of all the loyal men of the loyal States in the support of the Government, and in a willingness to acquiesce in whatever may be necessary to that end. We believe that slavery cannot survive the destruction of the rebellion, and the best way to hasten its overthrow is to attack it in its tenderest place. We hope the Government will soon come to our conclusion, and we will do all we can to bring about this result, but whether we succeed or not we shall yield a hearty support to the Administration in its efforts to subdue the rebellion.

General Shields.

The N. Y. Evening Post, of Friday, says:

We are informed by a gentleman of this city, who has been travelling with Gen. Shields for the last two months, that the General hastened East to the great injury of his business interests in Mexico, and at much personal and family inconvenience. As he did this to accept a grade in the army lower than that won by him on the field of battle in the Mexican war, it furnishes pretty substantial evidence of the truth and sincerity of his strong professions of loyalty to the Union.

We are certainly gratified to learn that General Shields has made such an impression on a fellow-traveller, whose opportunities, during two months, must have been all-sufficient for the purpose of learning the General's real sentiments. The free and constant communication between men thrown together on a long journey, is a condition most favorable for studying a man's opinions as well as his character. General Shields is an Irishman—frank, straight-forward and characteristically bold in his avowals, whether he agrees or differs. We have, therefore, great pleasure in giving the above, from an eminently respectable journal, as the latest testimony to the loyalty of General Shields, unless we reckon the friendly greeting and the apparently unshaken confidence with which he has been met by the President and men high in office at Washington, as testimony to the same effect. Seeing, however, that the General's letter to the Amador Breckinridge Club, in California—a letter written during the Presidential canvass, we believe—has been extensively copied by the press, and certainly contains sentiments in favor of the South, such as no loyal man could hold, we think General Shields owes it both to himself, his friends and the public, to set all doubts at rest by explaining that letter, or rather, if possible by disclaiming it altogether.

MASON AND SLIDELL SAFE AT BERMUDA.—NEW YORK, Jan. 16.—Captain Pray, of the brig Mountain Eagle, which arrived here at 7 o'clock this evening, reports that the British steamer Gladiator (T'Rinaldo,) having on board the two traitors, Mason and Slidell, had arrived at St. George, Bermuda, on the 8th instant, and sailed for St. Thomas on the 10th, whence the two rebels would take passage for England.

Southern Wailing.

The Richmond Examiner, in an article complaining of the system of inaction of the rebel forces, says:

"The effect of this obstinate adherence to the defensive programme has been very deplorable upon the lists of mortality. While we have lost thousands by disease, we have lost only tens by the casualties of the battle field. The whole country is filled with mourning; and the sad lament of mother, father, wife, sister, all, is that their kinsman died the horrid death of a hospital, and not the glorious death of a soldier on the battle field. The noble spirits that, in volunteering for their country's defence, thought to seek glory in the cannon's mouth, have paid the debt of nature upon beds of fever in vast charnel houses of disease, where those who ministered to them knew not their names, and where they were lost to all possibility of discovery from anxiously-seeking friends. The policy of defence has cost the lives of the more gallant and brave spirits who chafed under inaction; it has bereft our armies of ten thousand heroes, who, if led against the enemy, would have escaped the dangers of the field after winning victories that would have added lustre to our annals."

As both parties are heartily sick of inaction, we may expect stirring times soon. The rebels will have as much fighting as they want before all is over. We do not wonder, however, that they complain of the decaying and pining in camp, the same way to disease and inglorious death.

Here is another wail, of a different kind, a wail for the loss of the redoubtable PILLOW:

"The report that General Pillow has resigned his command in the Confederate army is confirmed by the Memphis Appeal, one of whose army correspondents thus describes the farewell scene: We formed in open order that he might pass between our lines, and as he did so, a scene transpired which the pen cannot portray. Since Washington's farewell to the army, perhaps the like has not occurred on this continent. As the General rode silently through our ranks, with uncovered head, and with tears rolling down his manly face, that mass of determined braves became children again. Every eye was filled with tears—not a word was spoken—all were too full to articulate. The Old Guard did not pay Napoleon a more beautiful tribute of regret when he bade them adieu. After he was seated in the cars a burst of applause went up, such as was never heard on the banks of the Mississippi before. Cheer after cheer was given him, and thus he left us, to wend our way to our quarters, solemnly and dejected."

Next, we have a wail of defiance. The resolution offered by Mr. Saulsbury, of Delaware, to appoint Commissioners to negotiate with the South, has been a fruitful source of Southern comment and bluster. Although Mr. Saulsbury's proposition was sneered down in the Senate, the rebels have pretended to believe that the North is considering such an insane proposition. Gov. LETCHER, of Virginia, has issued a proclamation of independence, in which he says that Virginia will never—no never, come back into the Union, and the Tennessee Legislature has the following resolution before it:

"Resolved, That any Commissioners appointed by the Lincoln Congress at Washington to the Government of the Confederate States, having for the object of their mission the reconstruction of the old Union, should be at once promptly rejected by the Government of the Confederate States."

The rebels may spare their breath. The only Commissioners they will receive will be cannon balls and Minie bullets. The restoration of the Union will take place after they are subdued, and whether they like it or not.

We will close these extracts from Southern papers with the following rebel defense of slavery, which looks very much like a wail over an institution in the throes of dissolution. We commend the extract, which is from the Memphis Avalanche, to those Northern presses which are so in love with the institution that they are about as anxious for the preservation of slavery, as they are for the overthrow of the rebellion. It will furnish them with arguments for their diatribes about abolitionists:

"The contrast between the enlightened, humane and honorable policy of the South and that of the North affords the most striking proof of the humanizing and beneficent influences of slavery. The civilized nations of the earth are beginning to open their eyes to the elevating and salutary effects upon society of this ennobling institution. They see a people reared under its influences, displaying in the conduct of a war waged against them with unparalleled atrocity and an utter disregard of the rules of civilized warfare, all that is noble, humanity, magnanimity, moderation and stainless chivalry which enter into the highest type of human civilization; in damaging contrast with the low, vulgar and brutal atrocity of their adversaries, which only finds a parallel in the Sepoys of India and the Druses of Syria, whose crimes against humanity have recently excited the abhorrence of Christendom. These developments of national character are causing the people of Europe to revise their notions on the subject of slavery.

"The history of the world may be challenged to show a nation which has reached or long maintained a high civilization without slavery, either absolute, as in the South and other countries, or in a modified form, as in the present European systems of labor. A monotonous social level, without the subordination of a menial class to one dominant and superior, is uniformly attended with social degeneracy and corruption, and national weakness and degradation; as witness the effeminate populations of India and the degenerate North, which has not been able to preserve its virtue or its freedom against the deteriorating influence of its false and defective social system.

"The hostility of the North against the South and southern institutions is prompted by malignant envy of the superior advantages which the South enjoys as thereunto of slavery. This atrocious war is the offspring of a malignant jealousy in the northern mind, of the superior prowess, prosperity and happiness of the southern people—a jealousy which hates the excellence it cannot reach."

Slaves and the War.

While this journal has inflexibly opposed any unconstitutional enactments by Congress, in the shape of general confiscation or emancipation bills, it must be borne in mind that the rebellion has dissolved all obligations our part to restore the slaves of actual insurgents. A majority of the Northern people have for years done their best to conquer their prejudices against the peculiar institution, by permitting the rendition of fugitives from labor; but when the secessionists chose to repay this repugnant service by waging a most atrocious war against their former brethren, it would be childishness, if not madness, to retain on our part the obligation which we previously acknowledged * * * * *

Looking closely at our obligations under the constitution, we hold, that with respect to the rebels, every one of them has been annulled by the fact of insurrection. We were under certain restrictions a year ago, which do not exist to-day. The sword of war has cut a knot which our hands could not untie. The rebel is an enemy and must be treated as such. If we confine ourselves to the recognised methods for overcoming him, we must make the greater use of these instrumentalities. To deprive him of the services of his slaves is but to dry up his resources, and thus hasten the termination of the war. We should make no more hesitation about it than seizing his stores or breaking up his communications. It is strictly politic, consistent, humane, and calculated to bring about a speedy extinction of the war.—N. Y. Commercial.

We are glad to see that staid and conservative paper advancing in the right direction. Having overcome some of its scruples with regard to slavery, we confidently look for its able support yet to be given to the entire destruction of the institution if it shall become necessary to the subduing of the rebellion. If all the slaves of rebels were welcomed into our camps, and used, where it is practicable to use them, for the promotion of the good cause, a great step towards success would have been taken. What we object to Gen. HALLECK's course is, that confining himself to the letter of the law of confiscation passed at the extra session of Congress, he permits no slaves to enter his camps unless they can prove that they have been employed, by the consent of their masters, in work directly aiding the rebellion. This is a very difficult thing for a slave to do, and the order is tantamount to a total rejection of all aid to be derived from the slaves of rebels. If the course indicated above by the Commercial is adopted—to wit, to receive the slaves of all rebels—a great step would be taken in the right direction.

A Story of the War in Kentucky—A Brave Old Man's Adventures.

A Campbellsville (Ky.) correspondent of the Louisville Democrat tells this story:

"I now have before me a letter to a friend from a private in Colonel Haggard's cavalry regiment, stationed at Columbia. The writer was formerly a justice of the peace, is a rough specimen of mountain character, is fond of his grog and a good joke, and always ready for a fight whenever it may suit the convenience of his or his country's enemies. His name is Andrew Jackson Harmon, (rather significant of the pugnacious propensity). It seems that 'Squire Garmon took a very active part in favor of the Union cause in Cumberland, (his county) Monroe and Metcalfe counties last summer and fall, captured some twenty head of contraband mules and several horses, and had a hand in bringing to a boat on Cumberland river engaged in the contraband business—in a word, 'Squire Garmon was a terror to the secesh generally in that locality, rendering himself obnoxious to their blood-thirsty proclivities.

"Some ten or fifteen days since 'Squire Garmon learned that his family were all down sick with the measles, and determined to visit them, cost what it might. So he obtained a furlough from his gallant colonel under protest that he (Garmon) would never return to his regiment. The first or second night after his arrival at home the secesh, his old neighbors and relatives, twenty eight strong, armed cap-a-pie, visited his house and rapped at his door. The 'Squire hailed them; no answer. He sprang out of bed, gathered his irons, and lighted a candle, when he discovered three men in his dining room, and fired at them. They all scampered out of the house, one falling dead at the door. The captain then ordered him to come out, which he refused to do, and in turn invited them to come in and exchange bullets there. This they declined to do, and immediately opened fire on his house through the doors and windows, the 'Squire returning the fire as fast as he could. This was keptup, the 'Squire thinks, about one hour, when his assailants left, leaving three dead in the yard and carrying off five mortally wounded, (since dead). The 'Squire then lighted up the house, and his sick family came out from their hidingplaces. Not a whole pane of glass remained in seven windows. Three balls had entered the posts and rails of his daughter's bed, she being too unwell to get up; twenty-five balls were found in his wife's bed-tick, and the furniture of his house was literally riddled.

"The 'Squire's personal casualties were as follows: One ball severed a finger, another bled him in the temple, a third crossed his breast, severing his shirt bosom, a fourth passed through his hat and a fifth unbuttoned his shirt sleeve.

"The 'Squire thinks they must have fired some two hundred rounds at him; but none the worse for wear, he is ready to repeat the operation whenever they are.

"The cool and deliberate manner in which the 'Squire details the rencontre to his friends, aside from his reputation for veracity, gives the highest assurance of its entire truthfulness."

Jackson's Compromises.

The Cincinnati Enquirer, a secessionist organ, has this paragraph:

"General Jackson put down the symptoms of rebellion in South Carolina in 1832, but it was by compromise; he knew that the Union could not be maintained by force, and he therefore acted on the true theory of our government, and encouraged a compromise of the difficulty between South Carolina and the general government. That is the way the threatened outbreak of 1832 was put down."

General Jackson threatened to hang John C. Calhoun. That was his way of "compromising." It turned out to be a very effective way, although the Cincinnati Enquirer does not see it in the light that Mr. Calhoun did at the time.

THE Bishop of Oxford has recently preached a sermon on the death of Prince Albert, advancing the idea that the calamity was a chastisement of Providence, and the Public Opinion, a new London weekly, alludes to the prelate and the sermon in these choice words:

"That groveling sensualist, oily Tartuffe, and sanctified hypocrite—Epicurus' own hog in the sacred fold—the Bishop of Oxford, by way of blistering the Queen's grief, informs her and the nation that the death of the Prince Consort is provoked 'by the national sins.' Would the smooth prelate kindly explain why death is to be understood as a mark of Divine displeasure? To our apprehension, his sleek and soapy life, his very existence among us, appears the most conspicuous scourge of our sins."

Gen. Cameron's Resignation.

The President desires it to be understood that no circumstance connected with the recent change in the Cabinet has in any way impaired his confidence in Gen. Cameron, or disturbed the harmony existing between him and the Administration. The name of Mr. Stanton was suggested to the President by Gen. Cameron himself, as largely possessing the qualifications fitting him for the post of Secretary of War, and enjoying the unbounded confidence of the commanding General. The names of Mr. Holt and Gen. Dix had been previously mentioned, and the appointment of the former was for a short time regarded as determined upon.—Washington Republican.

SHOT WOUNDS IN THE LUNGS.—Brigade Surgeon Pineo, of the Army, mentions three cases of recovery from gun shot wounds of the lungs: "Of gun shot wounds of the lung let me say one word. Three cases of a bullet passing through the substance of the lung, producing emphysema, and the air issuing from the aperture made by the bullet, so as to make the case unmistakable, have occurred under my observation, in which the patients have recovered. There has been some question about the probabilities of recovery in gun shot wounds of the thorax, and I therefore mention these cases, thinking you may be interested to know of such favorable results, in so many cases, of so grave a lesson."

IT IS SAID that the President has declined accepting Gen. Reynolds' resignation, preferring to give him a short leave of absence.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

To Horse Owners.—Dr. Sweet's INFALLIBLE LINIMENT FOR HORSES is unrivalled by any, in all cases of Lameness, arising from Sprains, Bruises, or Wrenching, its effect is magical and certain. Harness or Saddle Galls, Scratches, Mange, &c., it will also cure speedily. Spavin and Ringbone may be easily prevented and cured in their incipient stages, but confirmed cases are beyond the possibility of a radical cure. No case of the kind, however, is so desperate or hopeless but it may be alleviated by this Liniment, and its faithful application will always remove the lameness and enable the horse to travel with comparative ease.

Every horse owner should have this remedy at hand, for its timely use at the first appearance of lameness will effectually prevent those formidable diseases mentioned, to which all horses are liable, and which render so many otherwise valuable horses nearly worthless.
