JAMES H: LANE was born in Lawrenceburg, Indiana. His father, AMOS LANE, originally of New England stock, emigrated from New York to that place more than fifty years ago. He was a distinguished lawyer, and a member of Congress from his adopted State. He had six children, three sons and three daughters. JAMES HENRY was the youngest of the family. Only two are now living, the subject of our notice, and a brother, who resides in Indiana.

Gen. LANE had a good education. His mother was a very intelligent and refined woman, and his father filling with honor one of the learned professions, young Henry's education was not neglected. He took early to public affairs, and in the State in which he was born he became a member of the Legislature, Presidential Elector, Lieutenant Governor, and member of Congress. Kansas having made him a United States Senator, he has thus achieved the highest legislative honors that are possible.

When the Mexican war broke out, he raised a regiment, of which he was elected Colonel, and made the campaign with Gen. Taylor. He was at the battle of Buena Vista, where he distinguished himself, as he did in the campaign generally, as a they will necessarily attain the place and brave and skillful seldier. Of his career the time where success awaits them. since, it is scarcely necessary to speak. One thing is clear, however, and that is, sa, added to that which he gained in the Marican war, gives him a sum total of practical, experience searcely inferior to that of any officer in the army. As has been appropriately said, "he is no carpet of gastroannie knight," theorizing much and doing sublities amidiat danger and privation, but he has gained his monthly and the strategy and proved his qualities amidiat danger and privation, with rough and hardy solding engaged in carnets work, seeking for immediate and privation without an expectation of the strategy and private in the fallowing extract:

"The common idea concerning the general bearing, disposition and tone of charger and privation of the strategy of castion in his father's family would be sufficient to prove. His speeches in the Senate may be quoted upon this point. Though they are not as ornate and carefully studied as some, they are yet excellent in style and manner. Terse, pointed, and practical, commanding as much attention from his baseciates and she country, as those of almost any other member, they show that he is not unread and illiterate. Those who act and illiterate. Those who at alight opportunities for ob-

Gen. Lane is brave, resolute, persistent in purpose, untiring in energy, eminently practical, has faith in himself, and possesses the power of commanding the confidence of others. Those who know his qualities best, trust him the most.
