TUESDAY MORNING, JAN. 28, 1862.

Hon. Garrett Davis on a Rampage.

Hon. Garrett Davis, of Kentucky, when lately elected to the Senate of the United States, was treated with marked respect and courtesy by the press of the North, and by none spoken of with more praise than by the New York Tribune. This same Mr. Davis has lately occupied the Senate for two days, in a speech, professedly against Bright, but which was mainly on the last day an eulogium of slavery, a protest against emancipation, and a tirade against abolitionists. We will take one "elegant extract" from this precious speech, as follows:

"Mr. President, these fanatics, these political and social demons, your Beechers, your Cheevers, your Phillipses, and your Garrisons come here breathing pestilence from Pandemonium, trying to destroy this Union, so as to secure over its broken fragments the emancipation of slaves. They oppose Mr. Lincoln, an honest and pure a man as ever lived, because he stands by the Constitution, and is opposed to interfering with Slavery. The instances they have dared to put forth in this city have developed the Smithsonian Institution. If the Secessionists had dared to give expression to the same utterances they would have been sent, and properly sent, to Fort Lafayette or Fort Warren. What will you do with these monsters? I will tell you what I would do with them, and with that horrible monster Greeley, as they come sneaking around here, like hungry wolves after the dissection of Slavery. If I had the power, I would take them and the worst Secesshers and hang them in pairs. [Laughter.] I wish to God I could indict that punishment on them. It would be just. They are the disunionists. They are the madmen, who are willing to call up all the passions of the infernal regions, and all the horrors of a servile war. This they would carry out over the dissected fragments of a broken Constitution to obtain their unholy purposes, and I am too fearful that the Hon. Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Sumner) sympathizes with them. [Laughter.]

"That horrible monster Greeley!" The same Greeley who had hailed his election with pleasure! What demons slavery makes of men!

Mr. Harlan, of Iowa, answered the Senator, and gave him a neat a dressing as a man could desire. Davis had complained of the agitation of the slavery question. Mr. Harlan said:

I wish the Senator to bear me witness here, and the country to take notice of the fact that every long, labored, excited discussion of the slavery question that has taken place in this Chamber for the last six years, during which I have had the honor to occupy a seat here, has been lugged in that manner, and by gentlemen holding seats from slaveholding States.

Mr. Davis—Will the gentleman allow me to say a word?

Mr. Harlan—Certainly.

Mr. Davis—I confess to the gentleman's impeachment that a great part of my speech was inappropriate; but it was designed in some measure to meet the numerous petitions that have been presented by the Senator from Massachusetts, and other gentlemen upon this floor.

Mr. Harlan then proceeded to answer Davis in a most able and caustic manner, and he will hardly trouble the Senate again with a defense of slavery.

Mr. Greeley, who is so ferociously attacked by Mr. Davis, replies to his tirade in the following gentle and kindly manner. This is rather heaping the coals on the head of poor Davis:

Mr. Davis is at heart a good man, but constitutionally slow, beside being considerably older than he has been. He has been till very recently for nearly twenty years in retirement, and has halted while the world has moved on. He will wake up one of these mornings, like Rip Van Winkle, and perceive that he has relatively lost ground, and that he must exert himself to recover his leeway. If he should live ten years longer—as we trust he will—he will regard even Jeff. Davis & Co. with a species of gratitude for having fomented the villainous rebellion which was the means of ridding this country of the immeasurable curse of Slavery. Prejudiced and bitter as he is, he is not absolutely blind, and when he sees the truth he will own it like the honest man he radically is. Whoever ranks him with the Vallandighams and Ben Woods of the day, were he not proved faithless to the government. The father was a stubborn rebel and the son a patriot soldier.

"The scene may be better imagined than described. After exhausting every argument and expostulation upon the unrelenting boy, the old man disowned, and declared that he would disinherit him. To this the young soldier replied that his only hope was that he might recover from his wounds, get back into the Union army, and fight again for the Stars and Stripes! And thus they separated. The gallant soldier was among the released prisoners on the 3d of January, and upon placing his foot upon the federal steamer was the first to propose 'three cheers for the Stars and Stripes.' I regret to add that he is not yet fully recovered from his wounds, and was at last accounts confined in the military hospital at Baltimore."

Washington Illustrated.

The following statement by one whom we know as an earnest Republican Unionist, and believe to be honest and truthful, is so illustrative of much that goes on at the Federal metropolis, that we cannot withhold it from our readers:

HOW ITS DONE—SOMETIMES.

A clerk in one of the Departments at Washington was lately detected in the act of communicating information to the rebels, and was immediately discharged. A few days after, he appeared at the Secretary's office with a letter asking his re-appointment. This letter was from a Governor of one of the Western States. He writes to the Secretary that the ex-clerk is an old and intimate friend of his, a good and loyal citizen; has been most unjustly dealt by, and winds up by asking it as a particular personal favor that Mr. Ex-Clerk be re-instated in his office. And the request was immediately complied with! Directly after, an acquaintance meeting Mr. Reinstated, said to him:

"Where did you get acquainted with Governor ——?"

"I never was acquainted with him—never spoke to him in my life."

"How, then, did you get such a strong letter from him to the Secretary?"

"O, I have a pretty sister, who went to Alexandria the other day with the Governor. She pinched the letter for me!"

The story is well authenticated, and the writer believes it true. But what should be the punishment of a man who would thus betray his country, or what is the same in effect, protect those who do betray it? Qui Vive.

The Treason of Bright.

The New York Tribune has the following special dispatch from Washington:

Three Republican Senators, Messrs. Cowan of Pa., Ten Eyck of N. J. and Harris of N. Y., hampered an unconstrained by their unfortunate record in the Committee room, made the best that can be made of the bad case of Bright, to-day. They were overwhelmingly replied to by Senator Clark. Andy Johnson will speak for expulsion on Monday, and Latham against it. It is still hoped that the requisite two-thirds vote will be secured, and that the disloyal Senator will be expelled from the seat to which his legal title was always questionable, but which he has deliberately forfeited. The following is a carefully classified analysis of the probable vote:

For Expulsion—Anthony, Browning, Carlile, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Howard, Howe, Johnson, King, Lane, McDougall, Morrill, Pomeroy, Sherman, Simmons, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, Wilmot, Wilson of Mass., Wilson of Mo.—31.

Against Expulsion—Bayard, Cowan, Foster, Harris, Kennedy, Latham, Nesmith, Pearce, Powell, Rice, Saulsbury, Ten Eyck, Thompson—13.

Mr. Willey absent.

If this classification be accurate, Bright will be expelled. The votes of Messrs. McDougall, Carlile, and Rice, are, however, not certain, but the probabilities are that their votes will be cast as above. Doubt is felt as to the two or three Republicans classed among the Yeas, but we will not do them the possible injustice of publishing their names. Enough for to-night that we lament the fact that while Pennsylvania, Kentucky, and Missouri are impatient to punish treason in the person of a Senator, Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, are reduced by the action of their representatives to the anomalous and shameful necessity of maintaining him.

Mr. Cowan of this State, on Friday, made the following speech in the Senate, in defence of his position. It may satisfy himself and the half-loyal Democrats of the State, but hardly any body else. We give it, however, in full, as reported in the eastern papers, because we wish to do him strict justice. We hope it is the last time we shall have occasion to disagree with him:

Mr. Cowan, (Rep., Pa.) said that he had a very slight personal acquaintance with the Senator from Indiana, and had always opposed him in his political dogmas. He (Cowan) was as much in favor of putting down the rebellion as any one. He claimed that in examining this case the Senate must be governed by the same rules as if they were jurors. The charge against the Senator from Indiana is that of treason. There cannot be any halfway charge or half-way guilt. The Senator must be guilty of treason or nothing. If there was war between the North and the South, and the Senator from Indiana aided the South, he would of course be guilty of treason.

Mr. Sumner, (Rep., Mass.) said that he did not understand that there was such a war. That Jeff. Davis and his confederates had levied war against the Government, and their acts were traitors.

Mr. Cowan replied that if it could be proved that it was the intention of Mr. Bright to aid the traitors, there would be no doubt of his treason. The first fact to consider is, was there a state of war at the time the letter was written. There were then three or four parties in the United States. One of them believed in secession. Another party did not believe in secession, yet thought if the States actually seceded, we had no right to force them back. At the head of this party was James Buchanan. Another party thought that as the Southern States had gone on in their secession movements until March, and had formed a government, it was impolitic now to coerce them. Another party opposed secession, and was willing to take any means whatever to put it down. He (Cowan) understood that Mr. Bright belonged to the party which did not believe in secession, but thought it impolitic to attempt coercion, as it would only serve to more completely dissever the Union. At the first, all that the South asked was, that the United States troops should be withdrawn from the forts, and at the time the letter of the Senator of Indiana was written the Southern Commissioners were here treating, indirectly perhaps, with the Government for such a withdrawal. If there was at the time communication between the North and South, and if the Senator from Indiana thought the rebellion was not consummated, and there was to be no war, it was not treason to write the letter as he did. In regard to the subject of the letter, if there was to be a new Government formed there could be no harm in sending such a letter. He (Cowan) thought that did not amount to much, as it was simply following the example of the circle in which he (Bright) moved. He (Cowan) was willing to admit that the writing of such a letter was a great folly, but he thought that Mr. Bright might have looked at the matter from another stand-point, and he (Cowan) was not willing to affix the stigma of treason from such doubtful testimony.

A Loyal Son and a Rebel Father.

Corporal Merrell, a New York soldier recently released from imprisonment at Richmond, is writing for the Rochester Express a series of sketches entitled "Five Months in Rebeldom." In his last, he tells this story:

"Several of Ellsworth's Fire Zouaves were among the wounded, and I observed that they were regarded by the Confederate soldiers with a feeling of aversion, which was at no pains to conceal. One of their number (the Zouaves) was a young Virginian named Brown, who had long resided in New York. Shortly after his arrival at the hospital he was bidding adieu to each of the inmates preparatory to his departure, like hungry wolves after the carcass of Slavery. Prejudiced and bitter as he is, he is not absolutely blind, and when he sees the truth he will own it like the honest man he radically is. Whoever ranks him with the Vallandighams and Ben Woods of the day, were he not proved faithless to the government. The father was a stubborn rebel and the son a patriot soldier.

"The scene may be better imagined than described. After exhausting every argument and expostulation upon the unrelenting boy, the old man disowned, and declared that he would disinherit him. To this the young soldier replied that his only hope was that he might recover from his wounds, get back into the Union army, and fight again for the Stars and Stripes! And thus they separated. The gallant soldier was among the released prisoners on the 3d of January, and upon placing his foot upon the federal steamer was the first to propose 'three cheers for the Stars and Stripes.' I regret to add that he is not yet fully recovered from his wounds, and was at last accounts confined in the military hospital at Baltimore."
