The Constitution Protecting Rebels. for the Constitution, but who always plead never against them. One would suppose that the Constitution was an ingenious device to protect and reward rebels against country, and those of the Vallandighams persons to the clear nature of the law. This error is in supposing that Congress can by special acts, decree the punishment can, by special acts, decree the punishment of treason, and apply it to the traitors by, the very passing of the act itself. It is on this notion that they advocate a bill of emancipation, to be passed by Congress, and imagine that it would be operative and imagine that it would be operative at once to deprive rebels of their property in slaves. This is not so. A statute de-claring a man a murderer, or a rebel, or a traitor, would not be due process of law by any means, and lest such statutes should be any stated the Constitution means that men enlisted in the army of Jefferson Davis rebels and traitors, and making them incapable of bolding slaves, or affixing any other punishment to their oftense, would be a bill of attainder, and would be waste paper—waste paper, because the place in which to try its value will be the Courts, after the war is over and-peace established."

out leaving the box. Admitting the argument of the constitution-mongers, no punishment can be intion-mongers, no punishment can be infileted upon rebellion, except such as is incidental to the war, and which the loyal suffer equally with the rebellious. When the Bouth can fight no longer, she may lay down her arms, proclaim her loyalty for the present, and send Jaff. Davis, Toombs, Wigfall, Floyd, Mason, Slidell, Wise, Keitt, and the rest of the traitorous crew to Congress, to claim their share of the offices of Government, and to commence another conspiracy to rule or ruin the country.
And that is just what these disloyalists want.

Admitting this doctrine to be correct, the constitution is the worst enemy the American people have got to contend with. But the whole argument is preposterous. It proves too much. It shows that the concentration of the constitution—those amendments added after constitution—those a proves too much. It shows that the conigency, they considered it a condition which no human wisdom could provide against. It could only be grappled with by the men who met it face to face. But to say that there is nothing found in the Constitution, either express or implied, to enable it to protect itself against the despisers of the authority is to read the say that there is nothing found in the Constitution, either express or implied, to enable it to protect itself against the despisers of the say there is no control of the say there is no control of the say the control of the say the control of the say the control of the say there is no control of the say the say that there is no thing found in the Constitution of the say that there is no thing found in the Constitution, either express or implied to the say that there is no thing found in the Constitution, either express or implied to the say that there is no thing found in the Constitution, either express or implied to the say that there is no thing found in the Constitution, either express or implied, to consider the say that there is no thing found in the Constitution of the say that the stitution, either express or implied, to enable it to protect itself against the despisers of its authority, is to render it unworthy of the respect of anybody.

The Whole secret of this professed attachment to the letter of the Constitution arises from the pro-slavery feelings of those who are ever pleading its provisions. They care very little for the Constitution, until their darling institution is in danger. As soon as that is touched, they will ring the changes on the Constitution until your ears are dinned with the noise. The rebels may steal our arms and forts, and shoot down our citizens, and desscrate the sacred banner of our country, and it is all constitutional—at least they cannot be punished under the Constitution, according to their showing—but if a poor oppressed slave runs away from his rebel master, the Constitution immediately puts forth all its mastitution immediately puts forth all its mastitution in immediately puts forth all its mastitution in mediately puts forth all its mastitution is mediately account the constitution of the pay the constitution is professed at the constitution is according to their showing—but if a poor oppressed slave runs away from his rebel master, the Constitution immediately puts forth all its mastitution immediately puts forth all its mastitution immediately puts forth all its mastitution is according to the constitution is according to the constitution in the constitution is according to the constitution is acco

Article fifth of the amendments added after proves too much. It shows that the constitution has no power to protect itself—no power to inflict punishment upon those who despise, scoff and spurn its precepts. Its power is only potential to hamper its friends and assist its enemies. Is this the constitution devised by the wisdom of the Fathers? We trow not. It is true that the framers of the Constitution never contemplated such a state of affairs as now exist, and therefore made no express provisions for it.
