BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES

A Slight Cold, Cough, Hoarseness or Sore Throat, which might be checked with a simple remedy, if neglected, often terminates seriously. Few are aware of the importance of stopping a Cough or Slight Cold in its first stage; that which in the beginning would yield to a mild remedy, if not attended to, soon attacks the lungs. Brown's Bronchial Troches were first introduced eleven years ago. It has been proved that they are the best article before the public for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, the Hacking Cough in Consumption, and numerous affections of the Throat, giving immediate relief.

Public Speakers & Singers will find them effectual for clearing and strengthening the voice.

Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine, at 25 cents per box.

IMPORTANT FROM KANSAS.

Gen. Lane's Expedition--Important Order from Gen. Hunter--General Hunter takes Command of the Expedition.

LEAVENWORTH, Jan. 28.—The following General Order, issued by Major-Gen. Hunter, has caused a sensation in civil and military circles:

In the expedition about to be started South from "this Department, called in the newspapers Gen. Lane's Expedition," it is the intention of the Major-General commanding this Department, to command in person, unless otherwise expressly ordered by the Government.

Transportation not having been supplied, we must go without it.

All tents, trunks, chests, chairs, camp tables, camp clothes, &c., must be at once stored or abandoned. The General Commanding takes in his valise but one change of clothing, and no officer or soldier will carry more. The surplus room in the knapsack must be reserved for ammunition and provisions. Every officer and soldier will carry his own clothing and bedding.

The General Commanding has applied to the Government for six Brigadier-Generals from the senior Colonels, to enable him to do this in accordance with the order on the subject. Each Colonel will immediately report the date on which he was mustered into the service of the United States.

D. HUNTER, Major. Gen. Com.

What is the meaning of the above order? Is Gen. LANE not to have command of the Expedition after all? It is strange that Gen. HUNTER should issue such an order without authority, and it is still more strange that such authority should have been furnished him. There have been many singular occurrences connected with this war hard to understand, and this is one of them. The public will hardly be baulked of its expectations in this way, without complaint. The New York Times calls this order "peculiar and incomprehensible." The Chicago Journal has the following notice of it:

We are assured by a gentleman connected with Gen. Lane's Staff, that there are already 14,000 troops at Fort Leavenworth, and that more troops have been tendered to the General than he knows what to do with. His expedition is to have 32,000 men in it. He probably reached Fort Leavenworth last Monday. It is not known how soon he expects to start his grand movement southward.

P. S.—A new and decidedly "interesting" phase is given to the above expedition by a dispatch from Leavenworth, to be found in our telegraph columns. It appears that Major General Hunter does not recognize the right of Brigadier General Lane to step unceremoniously into his official boots. There is an imbroglio in prospect.

The question arises—who is Commander-in-Chief of the Armies? It was certainly understood that Gen. LANE went to take charge of the expedition with the approbation, and we presume with the authority of the President, Secretary of War, and of Gen. McCLELLAN, and yet Gen. HUNTER issues a special order announcing that he is going to take command. We shall regret if Gen. LANE is to go in a subordinate capacity, as all the hopes of the country founded on his peculiar dash and spirit, will be blasted by this arrangement. It would seem, also, that Gen. HUNTER does not contemplate giving LANE a command at all, as he requests the senior Colonels to report the date of their commissions, in view of their appointment as Brigadiers. The Chicago Tribune, however, pretty good authority, says that it is all right, and makes the following statement:

Major General Hunter, in command of the Department of Kansas, announces that the Cherokee expedition, heretofore popularly known as "Gen. Lane's," is General Lane's no longer, but his own; as he himself will take command in person. His special order to this effect, given in our telegraphic dispatches, lays downs the details of brigade organization and equipment. He will divide the column into six brigades, one of which will be commanded by Lane, another (probably) by Jennison; and the other four by the senior colonels, unless (as has been requested) the Government gives him Brigadiers enough to fill the bill. This action of Gen. Hunter has not been unexpected, either by General Lane or his friends, and it argues nothing of a change of policy, under whichever the column shall move forward. The relations, if they desire it, will be permitted to accompany the column. Hunter and Lane are most friendly, and the Government (as also Gen. Lane himself) expressly deferred to the former, as an officer of higher rank, to decide for himself whether he would take the chief command. The troops are rallying at Leavenworth, and the columns, which more than any other carries along with it the hopes and prayers of the country, will move forward with as little delay as possible. Gen. Lane had arrived at Leavenworth before the issue of this order, and it was probably made as the result of a conference between the two gentlemen.

In this connection it is proper to say that Gen. Lane, when in this city, was asked as to the possibility of Gen. Hunter's taking command, and replied: that there was work enough for both, indeed too much for one, and that he should prefer to be relieved of the thousand and one details that must devolve upon the senior officer, in order to devote himself more wholly to his own command. He said that there was the most perfect accord between Gen. Hunter and himself, and that whether Gen. Hunter took the field or remained at Leavenworth, he had no doubt they would work harmoniously together for the success of the expedition. The fact, therefore, that Gen. Hunter is to take command, seconded by such officers as Lane, Jennison, and four others like them, is encouraging of the result.

If all this is so, what is the meaning of the following, published in all the eastern papers of Thursday, as a special dispatch from Washington? If Gen. LANE is only to have a subordinate command, to be one of six Brigadier Generals, how does it come that he has such a formidable staff? Are all the six Brigadiers to be so formidably attended? It is a pretty kettle of fish, altogether.

GEN. LANE'S STAFF.

The President handed this evening to Col. Vaughan commissions for himself and the following gentlemen, who are to constitute the staff of Gen. James H. Lane: Col. Wm. H. Merritt, Lieut. Col. J. Kirkpatrick, Major Verplanck Van Antwerp, Major John Ritchie, Major T. J. Wood, Capt. Wm. A. Philips, Capt. Wm. O'Donnell, Capt. J. R. McClure, Capt. A. P. Pennell, Capt. William Lyle, and Capt. Volney Hickox. Col. Vaughan also had a social interview with Secretary Stanton. The above staff officers are to report forthwith to Major General Hunter, to be by him detailed to Gen. Lane. They leave for the West to-morrow, to enter active service.

Five Minutes With the New Secretary of War.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27, 1862.

Tuesday was the first day that it was generally understood by the people that any one could get a chance to see the new Secretary of War, without an introduction or having to wait in the lobby a week or two, as suited to the convenience of some petulant doorkeeper, or as a military man would say, the outer pickets. Mr. Stanton occupies the room formerly used by the previous administrations, at the head of the stairs in the second story.

The adjoining room is used by Mr. Watson, Assistant Secretary. In this room Mr. Stanton receives the crowd; in the centre is a table at which his amanuensis, Mr. Moore, sits, and in the corner is Mr. Watson, at his desk. The clock strikes 10, the waiting crowd rush in as doors swing open, and being among them, we soon find ourselves in the presence of the Secretary. Now one stands in front of him, and with a smiling countenance he reaches out his hand and takes a hearty grip with a gray-haired man. "Well, Sir, what is your wish?"

"My name is ——; my son fought at Springfield, and was wounded in the arm; he was on Fremont's Staff, but is now without a commission; I want one for him that he may again try his other arm here on the Potomac, or in Missouri."

"You shall have it sir!" replied Mr. Stanton, and turning to his Secretary, he ordered him to note the case. "Return home," he added, "the papers will be sent you;" and as the man attempted to thank him, he stepped to one side to two ladies who had just come in. "Madam, what can I do for you?" "Want a clerkship for my son; his father was killed at the battle of Belmont." Turning again he noted the case, took the address, told the lady to send him a sample of her boy's writing, and he would care for him.

The other is connected with a Minnesota regiment, over the river, and had some complaint about the treatment she had received in camp from some of the officers. "Madame, you must go to the Quarters of Gen. McClellan." "I have been there, Sir, and they would not read my papers or listen to my case." "Then give them to me, and I'll see why."

A small, bright-eyed boy, alone, was trying to work his way through the crowd, and the Secretary turned to him and asked what he wanted. "I want my father got out, Sir; he was taken at Bull Run, and has not come home with the rest." He gave his name and regiment, it was noted, and the Secretary, lifting him up, kissed him upon the forehead, and said: "Your father should be proud of such a noble boy, and I'll see that he is released."

A man with a half-military dress says he has been wronged by the Examining Board, and has been deprived of the command of his regiment (a Philadelphia cavalry regiment). "Sorry, Sir, if it is not all right; I cannot go back to investigate the acts of my predecessor." The Colonel insisted that his case was a plain one, if he could be heard. "Well," said the Secretary, "if you will get the officers to reconsider it, I will then listen to it."

An individual has some new invention for fire-arms; "Go to the Ordnance Department and get them to investigate it, and if they will recommend it, I will be glad to see it adopted."

A Colonel with a green uniform on has some pasâes he wants to read; "Are you an army officer?" "Yes, Sir." "Then you cannot be heard until to-morrow; come and see me then."

A large and well dressed man wanted a word in private; "What about?" "Some little matter about a contract he had for horses. "Cannot interfere, Sir; go to Gen. Meigs. If there is anything wrong he will rectify it." Another succeeds in getting him off to the side of the room, and the conversation is inaudible until the Secretary replied: "No, Sir; on no account will I interfere in any contract, while I am here, for anything from a thimble up. There are men appointed to attend to that department, and I shall hold them to a strict accountability for every action."

Two soldiers wanted to be paid for the time they were in confinement at Richmond, having just been released, and presented a furlough they had received a week ago, and also an order for their pay for time and rations. "Why do you not take this to Maj. Beckwith, and have him attend to it?" "We did, Sir; and he says that he has no order that will cover our case, and for want of 'forms' we are afraid we will be kept here until our time is up, and we want to go home and see the folks again." Turning to his Secretary, he ordered him to write to Maj. Beckwith, and order him to report forthwith in writing why these men were not paid up, instead of being kept waiting. It was done; he signed it himself, and said, "Here, take that to him, and bring an answer."

A Western man, who said he hailed from the Reserve in Ohio, had about a dozen quires of paper written over two or three times, which he said was an "Essay on Cheese." The Secretary laughed! "You must go to the Commissary General; he has charge of the feeding of the army." "I have been at first one and another all summer, and somehow or other I do not get any further ahead, and that is why I want you to investigate it;" and commenced to unroll his papers. "Indeed, Sir, I do not know how cheese would agree with the soldiers."

"That's just why I want to you read these papers and examine these certificates." "But I have not time, Sir." All hands commenced laughing, but the Ohio man stuck to it bravely. "I assure you that there is not a soldier in the army who does not like crackers and cheese, and I can make it for three cents a pound." "Now I tell you what you had better do, go to Senator Wilson and get him to put it in his bill; it will then pass the Senate and become an army regulation to give out cheese rations." "Well, could you not endorse it, and then it would be sure to be passed?" "No, I cannot indorse it, because I know nothing about it." "Oh, well I will leave these papers," and he made for the table. "I will never read them, if you do, until the war is over." With a look of despair, Ohio made for the door, inquiring of every one he met if they knew where Senator Wilson lived?

Judge Wilkins, of Pittsburgh, here came in, received a hearty shake of the hand, and a number of congratulations passed between them. The doorkeeper of the little room announced the President, and off the Secretary went to see him. He soon returned, however, and Ma
