letter was written, in four parties, as that it is giving all the aid and comfort follows: 1. The secessionists, who had gone away and established a "new Government, called the Confederate States." 2. There was a second party, who denied the right of these secessionists to go off, but denied the right under the constitut to coerce them back again. At the head o this party was Mr. Buchanan. 8. There was another party who, denying the right of secession, and admitting the right of coercion, yet thought it impolitic to use force to restore the Union, but considered it best to "trust to compromise and conciliation to restore the States composing it back to the Union." 4. There was a fourth party, to which Mr. Cowan said he had the honor to belong, which was about to assume the reigns of government, to endeavor if possible to res oue the country from its difficulties, coerce rebellion and punish treason. cating with the Chief of that Government community. Let Great Britain look at her This question is answered as follows-"I own history. The New York World aptly think that is a fair presumption; because if there was no war, and if there was to be If, in the conduct of this war, the United States Government no war, then this communication was innocent enough."

ted States Government should order the lovee of the Mississippi to be broken down so as to swamp New Orleans, it would doubless be the occasion of a storm of in-dismatic against To our mind, this whole argument is in conclusive. It is a strained apology for conclusive. It is a straimed apology for rank treason. Whatever Mr. Batour may have thought, in the charitable estimation of Mr. Cowar, yet when we pass in review of Mr. Cowas, yet when we pass in review the circumstances of the case, we can ar-rive at no other conclusion than that there was to be war-in foot war had already in the work of the state commenced, for acts of war had already In the year 1801, to force the French
