The Slaves of Lane's Brigade.

[Correspondence of the N. Y. World.]

CAMP DAVIDSON, NEAR FORT SCOTT, KANSAS, Jan. 28, 1862.

I wrote you some account of these unwilling individuals about a month ago. Perhaps the novelty of further observation will be interesting. This experiment of Lane's is the first of the kind in the history of the slavery question. For many years the underground railroad has carried passengers with good success and remarkable freedom from accidents; but its operations were necessarily secret, contrary to law, and opposed to the public opinion of the community into which the fugitives were introduced. These circumstances entailed on the negro a necessity for concealment. His individuality was constantly prevented from asserting itself by the knowledge that when his actions attracted attention the probabilities of detection and consequent return to slavery were greatly increased. Haunted by this ever-present fear, oppressed by the unfriendly feeling of the people among whom he lived, he must ever be ready to fold his tent like the Arab, and as silently steal away. Thus the only favorable condition for determined and persistent effort—energy—could not exist in the mind of the fugitive. Dwarfed in his manhood, imprisoned in the tomb of silence, seeing only danger in ambitious effort, the fugitive retained the vices and indolence of his former state—in fact often degenerated in freedom, thereby furnishing a text to every pro-slavery zealot.

The negroes liberated by the Kansas Brigade have had a better chance, and have not failed to improve it. They were slaves in Missouri (and to be a free white man in Missouri is to be a dirty, lazy, ignorant, uncivilized being), but the magical order of Lane—"All loyal persons, without regard to color, seeking our lines, shall be treated kindly"—transformed these slaves into men. It placed them at once in a society where each man finds his level. The best are at the top always. They had at once all the responsibilities, as well as the rights, privileges, and immunities of freemen. If they worked they were paid; if they didn't work they might starve—just as they can also might do. If they know how to drive they received teamsters' wages; if they wished to hire on a farm they made their own bargain, and from the very start they more than earn their living. They are shrewd at bargains, watchful of chances to make money, civil and obliging to all; they are the best teamsters in the brigade, and are used by the quartermasters in preference to soldiers detailed for that duty. Those who were not needed in the army were hired by the farmers of Kansas, who, in many cases, drove from Lawrence to Fort Scott, 100 miles, to secure them at as good wages as are paid to white laborers. Some are established in Fort Scott as shoemakers, blacksmiths, carpenters, &c. Many are engaged in transporting army stores from Leavenworth to the various commands, using their own teams, too great scrutiny not being made into the former ownership of the horses and mules, many of them having made their appearance in camp about the same time as the negroes. They have established a character for fair dealing with the soldiers, and the kindest relations exist between them.

In a religious point of view they are generally heathens. I have seen hundreds of them with charms, and one venerable old darkey—only one remove from his cannibal parents—had a "Fetish," actually a little idol, which he regarded with superstitious awe. I will back a Missouri negro as a simon-pure heathen against any inhabitant of "Greenland's icy mountains, or India's coral strand." At the same time they evince an earnest desire to learn to read, and are ever ready for a lesson from those who are interested in them. A movement is now on foot for a regular evening school for adults and children, to be taught by such soldiers and officers as may volunteer for the service. Religious instruction is also received with all the fervor of the negro nature. They seem to comprehend the cardinal doctrines of the great plan of salvation, with the simple and child-like faith so characteristic of the race.

Let me then repeat what I asserted in a former letter, after a still more extended observation directed to that point, "in every case I have found the slave fit for freedom."

European Items.

THE kingdom of Italy has been formerly recognized by the Emperor of Brazil.

THE restrictions on the travel of foreigners in the Russian Empire have been almost all abolished by the order of the Czar Alexander II.

A NUMBER of Prussian savants are to be sent to Athens to make archæological excavations there, and direct their especial attention to the Acropolis.

THE steamer Kent, which arrived at Plymouth on the 6th ultimo, after a two and a half months' voyage from Australia, brought 105,000 ounces of gold. What was the "Golden Fleece" idea to that?

RUSSIA is drawing supplies of cotton from Khiva and Bokhara, and the cultivation of the staple in those countries has been very largely extended. The value of that sold recently at the fair of Novgorod was estimated at £150,000.

THE city of Odessa has been invaded by mice to an alarming extent. The cats in the place have eaten so many that they have grown too corpulent to catch any more.

A POOR shoemaker of Brentwood, England, has, by the death of a distant relative, unexpectedly become the possessor of a fortune of £1,000,000.

THE expenses of the Windham Lunacy Commission, in rich mine for the lawyers engaged—reached £1,000 per day, or £100 per week, the "demurrion total" being near £25,000. It is stated that the council received 500 guineas with their brief, besides "refreshers" of 50 guineas per day and 10 guineas for every consultation. The junior counsel engaged are also remunerated very liberally, and the twenty-three jury receive three guineas per day each. The expenses for short-hand reporting amount to £1,000.

THE Crown Princess of Prussia has despatched to the municipality of Berlin this reply to the address condolence of which she received upon the death of Prince Albert:

"For the sympathy you have expressed towards me, after the heavy stroke of fate which has afflicted the royal family and the people of England, and which has been the bitterest sorrow of my life, I return to the magistrates and council of Berlin my most sincere thanks. In such a calamity the mind lifts itself above earthly things and seeks for consolation in sources which are imperishable. If anything earthly could diminish the weight of this heavy affliction, it would be the thought that the irreparable loss is acknowledged as such in every circle; and that the rare and lofty attributes of my dear father, so prematurely removed, will be embalmed in an enduring memory."

ADMINISTRATION POLICY.—A Washington letter to the New York Evening Post says:

A delegation of prominent Republicans recently came on here from the West to urge upon the Administration a more decided war policy, and to ascertain, if possible, the exact position of President Lincoln on the slavery and emancipation question. After remaining here for several days, and holding repeated interviews with Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Stanton, they left satisfied with the position of the Administration, and especially pleased with the statements and the general position of the new Secretary of War. The conversations which took place between Mr. Stanton and the deputation it would be improper to publish, but they were of such a character as to convince the most radical Republican that Mr. Stanton has no such respect or love for the institution of slavery as will move him a hair from his proper course in the prosecution of the war.

OFFICIAL.

River News.

The river rose a few inches on Friday night and Saturday, but yesterday it was falling, with five feet eight inches by the marks last evening. The weather continues clear and cold, with considerable floating ice in the Allegheny river.....The arrivals during the past two days embrace the John T. McCombs from Wheeling, Clara Foe from Cincinnati, and J. W. Hallman from Louisville. The Hallman had an excellent cargo, including two hundred and thirty bbls. of tobacco.....The Emma Graham from Zanesville, Economy and Dialem from Cincinnati, and Ida May from Louisville are due to-day. The Graham returns as usual on Tuesday at 4 p. m.....The Lizzie Martin for Zanesville, Undine for Gallipolis, Iowa for Wabash river, and Bay City for Cincinnati, cleared on Saturday evening. The Tycoon for Saint Louis, with all the freight she could take, got off on Sunday morning.....The Jacob Poe, Key West and Emma will leave for Cincinnati and Louisville during the week.....The Melnotte for St. Louis, will be ready to leave in a day or two.....The St. Cloud left St. Louis for Pittsburgh on Thursday, with a good trip. She was to be followed on Saturday by the Davidson.

Another fleet of steamers left, while others were coaling and preparing to leave for the "seat of war" last night, under sealed orders, on Government service. During the day an order was issued from the proper authorities to prevent the departure of all boats destined for points above—well, we may as well call the town "sharpsburg" or "Chevlet." Several of the steamers receiving for the points alluded to, in order to fully comply with the aforesaid order, discharged their miscellaneous merchandize last night. Fifteen hundred mother SHIPS! Large number of Government wagons are also being shipped to the "seat of war." For the benefit of all whom it may concern, we can state with authority that if the Government requires the services of more boats, there is at present between sixty and seventy good steamers and low-boats at Pittsburgh and vicinity, all of which are ready when wanted. The "Iron City" is "good" on steamboats, as well as shot, shell, cannon and metallic coffins.

The Cincinnati Gazette, of Saturday, says:

The Government having chartered all the steamers at the landing in this city, as well as all other at way ports, and ordered them to Pittsburgh forthwith, there is no opportunity of shipping to Pittsburgh. Several steamers that had commenced loading Wednesday to put their freight ashore and proceed at once to Louisville.
