The blockade of this navigation has cost the nation millions of dollars in additional cost for transportation, and has inflicted on the people of Washington great additional cost for all the necessaries of life. We were told, when these batteries they moreover, asserted quite as unhesistingly that, if the loyalist did not play in the telegraphic column. But this thing we must do. The Panic at Nashville.

A correspondent of the Indianapolis Jossac, writing from Munfordsville, Ky., states that just before he left our Green river camps, a gentleman had just reached there, who had left Hashville on the day of the reception of the news of the fall of Fort Donelson. He is a very strong Union man, and had premodified in escape to our lines some time since, but the stitutesses of the rebel guards had prevented the observance of the rebel guards had prevented the observance in the structure of the rebel guards had prevented the observance in the structure of the rebel guards had prevented the observance in the confusion by this, to the rabels; more terrible news. He represents the state of excitemental Nashville as being unparalleled. A perfect panic reigned throughout the whole city. The streets reigned throughout the whole city. The streets were throughout the whole city. The streets were throughout the whole city. The streets were throughout with people wild with excitement. Leading rebels were making speeches from store-goods boxes, from the street corners, to the storet populace, stating that the "Federals" were upon them, the city was defective friends. By that one act they would add $,000,000 to their effective strength; and is any one silly enough to think that, in so desperate a case, they will any species of fire arms to rally to the defense of the place. A Despairing Wall from Richmond-Effect of the Victory at Donelson.

Owing to yesterday being "a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer" in Savannah, we are without papers from there. By a letter written just before the train left, we learn that the federal exists were slowly gaining ground in their efforts to reach the main channel of the river, and that the attack would not be much longer delayed. We suppose the vessels alluded to must be large pose the vessels altitude to must be large steamers, as the News, of 'yestorday, re-ported several vessels already in the river. We are indebted to a friend for a pri-vate dispatch, stating that all was quiet this morning at 10 o'clock.
