There are many and strong objections to this plan, one of which is that the people of the free States will not like to be taxed to pay for slaves which the slaveholders' repebilion has made comparatively worth less. They will willingly pay a tax for war purposes to put down the rebellion, but will not submit with a good grace to be taxed for the benefit of slave owners. This is one objection, and there are others, but we do not feel disposed to discuss them now. We are glad to see a disposition on the part of the President to look this fearful question of slavery in the face. We doubt very much, if Congress should adopt the resolution recommended, that it would amount to anything. If the offer was entertained by any of the slave States it would most likely lead to long negotiation between such States and the General Government as to the amount of the compensation and the length of time the gradual emancipation was to go on. None of them would object to the Government paying for the old and decrepit, provided they could sell the young slave progency down south. As a practical measure, for the closing of the war, it is too tedious. We cannot afford to go on spending two millions a day while the Border States and Government might be arranging this scheme. Even admitting its wisdom, it is not a practical war measure, or rather a peace compelling measure.

The President says that the Union must be preserved, and that all indispensable means for its preservation must be employed. War is carried on to that end, and is sill indispensible. The young man told me he was a native of Harrisburg, Fa., and had resided there until the antiumn of 1869, when he went to Columble, Tennessee, and there engaged in the practice of the law with considerable success. While in that State he became acquainted with and ensmored of a young woman of culture and fortune, a distant relative, I understand, of Gen. Pillow, and was soon engaged to make the force conficience, and the requisition for making, and very nice breath the produced.
