Island No. 10.

The difficulties of subduing the rebel defences at Island No. 10, and on the Tennessee branch of the Mississippi, opposite the island, are very great. The river at this point doubles on itself. Approaching the island the river runs nearly south, and then making a sharp turn, it runs nearly north. The island is below the bend, where the river runs north, consequently, it cannot be reached until the bend is passed, but along the Tennessee shore, in the large circle of the bend, are placed formidable batteries, sweeping the whole river above, below, and at the bend, thus guarding all access to it. But the greatest difficulty is, the river is very swift at this place, and it is impossible to bring the gunboats into close quarter, and hold them there with the bow down stream, the best position in which to fight. The boats can be held with their bows up stream, but this exposes the sterns to injury, and endangers the safety of the vessel, because, if any accident should happen to the steering apparatus, as occurred on the Tennessee river, they would float right on to the enemy's batteries, where they would be destroyed. The mortar boats, also, do not answer as well as expected, owing to the uncertainty of the aim. They would be splendid for battering down a city, or throwing shells into a camp, but for the destruction of batteries they are not so effective. A writer on the spot, says:

Some of the officers think we will be able to drive them off in the course of a week by the mortar shelling, but my faith is weak. We can make the island hot, but if driven off they would come right back as soon as our fire slackened. The damage to the works being easily repaired, the shells would have to dismount their guns to prevent their holding it, and the chances of that are very remote.

The same writer hints at the following mode of effecting a lodgement on the Island:

If Gen. Pope could cross at Point Pleasant, he could make short work of the enemy by a land attack. But he has as yet no means of doing it. Of what inestimable value would be two (or even one) of these little steam tugs to him now, to tow his army over on rafts and scows, for he has the command of the river at Point Pleasant; but the chances are largely in favor of their being blown out of water, were they to attempt to run by the batteries even of a dark night. I have confidence, however, that some means can and will be found by which a crossing can be effected. As a place for river batteries, the enemy's position here is stronger than Columbus, and if resolutely held, as it doubtless will be, its capabilities of defense are sufficient to disable every gunboat in an hour's contest.

Rebel Atrocities.

It has been repeatedly denied, says a dispatch to the New York Tribune, that the rebels committed atrocities upon our wounded and dying soldiers after the battle of Bull Run. Gov. Sprague, of Rhode Island, has just returned from the ground which he visited for the purpose of recovering the bodies of officers of Rhode Island Regiments who fell there mortally wounded. The remains of Col. Slocum, together with the Major and Captain of his regiment, were found. The old colored man who showed them the spot where they were buried, said that the Georgia regiment had cut the Colonel's head off, and burned his body. The rebels made a mistake and cut off the head of the Major instead of the Colonel. They found all the officers and soldiers buried with their faces downward, an intended disgrace. It was Gov. Sprague's regiment that made such frightful havoc with Bartow's Georgia regiment.

Reorganization of Fairfax County.

The loyal residents of Fairfax county, Va., assembled at the Court House, on Saturday, for the purpose of taking steps towards a reorganization of the county government; most of the officers having joined the rebels, and with them evacuated the county upon the recent advance of our troops. Speeches were made by Chas. H. Upton, Hon. J. C. Underwood, J. Hawkhurst (the delegate to the Wheeling Legislature,) and H. T. Brooks. A series of resolutions was adopted, expressing unalterable devotion to the Union, denouncing the rebellion as wicked and outrageous, and appealing to Governor Pelrpoint to order an election for county officers, and also praying Congress to compensate the loyal sufferers out of the confiscated property of Virginia rebels. A separate resolution, expressing confidence in the President and Secretary of State, was passed amidst immense cheering.

Disloyalty in the Churches.

Quite a sensation was created last Sunday, in some of the Episcopal churches of Washington and Georgetown, by the withdrawal of part of the congregation during the reading of the special prayer issued by Bishop Wittingham, of Maryland, rendering thanks to Divine Providence for the progress of the Union arms. Many of the families who took part in these disgraceful scenes have heads in the government service.

We shall never look for permanent success until our Government shall resolutely rid itself of Secessionists. It is amazing that Heads of Departments will keep in their employ men whose secession sympathies are well known, and whose families scarce deign to hide their rebellious feelings.

TERRIBLE RUIN.—Washington dispatches say that small squads of rebel horsemen are scouring the country within five miles of Manassas, impressing all the able-bodied men left within their swoop, robbing the farms for the hundreth time and destroying what they cannot carry away.

If our army would move on, the fearful destruction which is making Eastern Virginia a desert, might be prevented. But probably it is in the programme of the General commanding to punish rebellion this way. If there were none but rebels to suffer, this is very well; but if there are Unionists who are appealing for the protection of the Government in vain, it is not well. And will not our Government hereafter be called upon to pay this loss?

GOVERNOR OF COLORADO.—Dr. John Evans, of Chicago, has been nominated and confirmed as Governor of Colorado Territory, vice Gov. Gilpin.

GOVERNOR OF UTAH.—Stephen S. Harding, of Indiana, was on Friday nominated as Governor of Utah, vice Gov. Dawson, rejected.

Affairs in Tennessee.

Governor ANDREW JOHNSON has issued a proclamation to the people of Tennessee, and has assumed the reins of government. His proclamation is a calm and sensible document, but it is clear he means that the laws shall be respected, and no rebellion allowed to show itself. After reciting the commencement and progress of the rebellion, and the efforts made use of by the President to preserve the constitutional authority in all the States, he says:

In this spirit, and by such co-operation, has the President conducted this mighty contest, until, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, he has caused the national flag to float undisputed over the capitol of our State. Meanwhile the State government has disappeared. The Executive has abdicated; the Legislature has dissolved; the Judiciary is in obeyance. The great ship of state, freighted with its precious cargo of human interests and human hopes, its sails all set, and its glorious flag unfurled, has been suddenly abandoned by her officers and mutinous crew, and left to float at the mercy of the winds, and to be wrecked by every rover upon the deep. Indeed the work of plunder has already commenced. The archives have been desecrated; the public property stolen and destroyed; the vaults of the State Bank violated, and its treasures robbed, including the funds carefully gathered and consecrated for all time to the instruction of our children.

In such a lamentable crisis, the Government of the United States could not be unmindful of its high constitutional obligation to guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government an obligation which every State has a direct and immediate interest in having observed towards every other State, and from which, by no action on the part of the people in any State, can the Federal Government be absolved. A republican form of government, in consonance with the Constitution of the United States, is one of the fundamental conditions of our political existence, by which every part of the country is alike bound, and from which no part can escape. This obligation the national government is now attempting to discharge. I have been appointed, in the absence of the regular and established State authorities, as Military Governor for the time being, to preserve the public property of the State, to give the protestion of law actively enforced to her citizens, and, as speedily as may be, to restore her government to the same condition as before the existing rebellion.

In this grateful but arduous undertaking, I shall avail myself of all the aid that may be afforded by my fellow-citizens. And for this purpose I respectfully, but earnestly, invite all the people of Tennessee, desirous or willing to see a restoration of her ancient Government, without distinction of party affiliations, or past political opinions, or action, to unite with me, by counsel and co-operative agency, to accomplish this great end. I find most, if not all of the offices, both State and Federal, vacated, either by actual abandonment, or by the action of the incumbents in attempting to subordinate their functions to a power in hostility to the fundamental law of the State, and subversive of her National allegiance. These offices must be filled temporarily, until the State shall be restored so far to its accustomed quiet, that the people can peaceably assemble at the ballot box and select agents of their own choice. Otherwise anarchy would prevail, and no man's life or property would be safe from the desperate and unprincipled.

I shall, therefore, as early as practicable, designate for various positions under the State and county Governments, from among my fellow-citizens, persons of probity and intelligence, and bearing true allegiance to the Constitution and Government of the United States, who will execute the functions of their respective offices, until their places can be filled by the action of the people. Their authority, when their appointments shall have been made, will be accordingly respected and observed.

To the people themselves, the protection of the Government is extended. All their rights will be duly respected, and their wrongs redressed when made known. Those who through the dark and weary night of the rebellion have maintained their allegiance to the Federal Government will be honored. The erring and misguided will be welcomed on their return.

And while it may become necessary, in vindicating the violated majesty of the law, and in re-asserting its imperial sway, to punish intelligent and conscious treason in high places, no merely retaliatory or vindictive policy will be adopted. To those, especially, who in a private, unofficial capacity have assumed an attitude of hostility to the Government, a full and complete amnesty for all past acts and declarations is offered, upon the one condition of their again yielding themselves peaceful citizens to the just supremacy of the laws. This I advise them to do for their own good, and for the peace and welfare of our beloved State, endeared to me by the associations of long and active years, and by the enjoyment of her highest honors.

And appealing to my fellow-citizens of Tennessee, I point them to my long public life as a pledge for the sincerity of my motives and an earnest for the performance of my present and future duties.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

One of Gov. Johnson's first acts was to put down treason in the press. He, therefore, sent for the newspaper proprietors, and stated his views to them. The editors and proprietors of the Nashville Patriot would not consent to abandon their secession proclivities, and left the tripod with dignity, after issuing the following notice:

It is proper for us to state that our newspaper printing establishment has been leased to the employees in the office, and they will, so long as it be profitable, publish the Patriot upon their own responsibility. Neither of the former editors or proprietors will have any further connection with its publication. We wish this point distinctly and emphatically impressed upon the minds of those who have read the Patriot in days gone by, and regarded it as an exponent of sound principle.

A Virginia Farm.

A letter writer gives the following description of a Virginia plantation, and the awful destruction which has fallen upon the whole region bounded by the Blue Ridge, the Rappahannock and the Potomac.

While rummaging among old papers in Weir's mansion, at Manassas, which had been converted into rebel headquarters, I found a package of Weir's letters, dated "Liberia," 1810. Curious about the matter, I applied to an old negress for information. She was born on the plantation, and had nursed two generations of Weir children. "Why, bress you, honey, (she replied,) Liberia is de plantation." "Strange fancy for a slaveholder, wasn't it? Said the good old soul, "Master was, alias (always) berry kind to his people. He had over a hundred, but dey's scattered up an' down the country. 'Lord knows where. Mr. Beauregard come here an' turned de poor old man out of his own house, and took it himself. Mr. Weir (pronounced Ware) went to his overseer's house—a mean little frame in full view of the mansion—but he was agin the war, and he finally went down to Fauquir, where he is now." Aunty gave quite an interesting history of her master. He was twice married. By his first wife—the daughter of a foreign nobleman—he got his magnificent estate, and thirteen children—eleven sons and two daughters. Seven sons, two of whom are in the rebel army, and one daughter, a widow, survived. The second wife died childless.

"Liberia" embraces twenty-four hundred acres in one tract—a splendid farm—every acre of which is tillable. The soil is unusually productive, and has been well sustained by fertilizers. The main line fence consists of wickets with interlacings of cedar and pine brush—in short a bastioned fence. Col. Meredith, who stands among our first Western farmers, was struck with the closeness and solidity of the work, suggesting that it would prove a valuable hint to Western farmers. The mansion occupies a central position on the crest of a gentle elevation, which commands a view of almost every acre of the plantation. From the ridge of the roof the eye takes in a noble prospect—Manassas Plains, Centreville Hills, the valley of Bull Run, and the Blue Ridge mountains, with intervening forests and other captivating plantations—numerous ever green groves of pines and hemlocks sandwiched between bare woods and fallow grounds, imparting rare beauty to the March landscape. The Weir mansion is a large, plain red-brick structure of old Virginia style, two stories high, with portico in front, and wing, at each north gable for a kitchen. A wide hall subdivides it, and the apartments are spacious. It was surrounded by
