The Battle of the Iron Clad Ships.
As we expected, the London papers are wonderfully interested in the exploits of the Merrimack, and of the Monitor. All the papers are discussing the question relating to an Iron Clad Navy. The London Times says:

The first of these is one of the most interesting incidents that have marked the war. For the first time the newest application of science has been tested in a fight between two vessels of equal force. Who would have thought it possible that England and America should be engaged in a contest of this kind? It is a very singular and interesting incident.

The Merrimack is a very powerful vessel. She is armed with ten guns, and is capable of sailing on a beam sea. She is a very formidable opponent. The Monitor is a very powerful vessel. She is armed with ten guns, and is capable of sailing on a beam sea. She is a very formidable opponent.
