ant sots which mark the way to this end, and to look forward to others still more im-

stands the message of the President, recommending that Congress should promise thapecuniary aid of the Government to any State which should take measures to emancipate its slaves. Congress has promptly acted upon the recommendation, and thus the Government stands pledged to sustain an Emancipation policy in the Slave States. That one act marks an entire revolution in public feeling. For more than half a century the Government has been upon the side of Slavery; now it is, where its foundards designed it should be, upon the side of Freedom.

The next step towards the great end was accomplished in the bill abolishing Slavery in the District of Columbia. This bill does not free many slaves; but it eases the national conspicace by relieving it of the General McClellan: You will be surevised.

The next step towards the great end was though the process of the New York papers of Monday evening:

S. F. VON BONNIDAST, Postmaster.

In the District of Columbia. This bill does not free many slaves; but it eases the national conscience by relieving it of the burden which the maintenance of Slavery at the National Capital imposed upon it. The people can now, having washed their winds of this guilt, strike at the "institution" wherever it presents a vulnerable point.

Two other facts present equally encouraging signs of progress. The first is the certain recognition of Liberia and Hayti and the second the repeal of the lawer cluding, colored men from carrying the mails. The refusal of the Government hitherto to recognize Liberia and Hayti the fact and the second the repeal of the Government hitherto to recognize Liberia and Hayti to the content of t was based solely upon the fact that these were governments established and sustained by black men. To recognize them would be to admit not only their right to, but their expacity for, self-government. This was regarded as an admission fatal to Slavery and the Government, in its blind subjugation to that infamy, refused to make it. That subjugation, thank God! is over, and the recognition of the black man's right and ability to establish and maintain free hitherto to recognize Liberia and Hayti of lumber. governments marks another milestone on among the first to onter the rebel works. The Fortieth New York Volunteers lost one man killed and two wounded. The Seventieth Regiment New York Volunteers lost titch Regiment New York Volunteers lost titch Regiment New York Volunteers lost two men killed. It will free hosts of slaves army generally. It will free hosts of slaves The following order was sent to divisions result of no mean importance; but its will extinguish slavery to put an efid to it.

Of events that are almost sure to happen, bearing in the same direction, we may mention the Confiscation bill, the bill to prohibit the inter-state Slave trade, the bill to prohibit slavery in all our national territories, and the emancipation movements in the Border States.

That some confiscation bill will pass is now certain, and that it will include the slavers of all Rebels is almost equally certain. This, of itself, will nearly suffice to wipe out Slavery, and what it fails to do ther measures will accomplish. If the inter-State Slave trade is abolished, Rehelowers cannot run off their slaves to other States.

The operations of the confiscation per bibition of the inter-state Slave trade is abolished, Rehelowers cannot run off their slaves to other States. One of our Generals of the confiscation per bibition of the inter-state Slave trade is abolished, Rehelowers cannot run off their slaves to other States. Thus events, past and present, will combine with those to come in hastening the doom of the accursed "institution." No. one expected Slavery to be extinguished at a single blow; nor, perhaps, was it reasonable to expect that it would be exterminated by any direct, positive assault upon it. It is to fall, and is falling, by the combined influence of separate acts, growing inevitably out of the events of the war—mere incidents, of themselves, perhaps, but all tending to the same great end. The war was not begun to extinguish slavery, nor is it prosecuted now for that purpose; but Slavery and the Rebellion are so closely bound together that a blow aimed at one is sure to affect the other, and the fate of one seals the fate of the other. one seals the fate of the other.

Gen. Halleck Fortifying to be Ready

The correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, secompanying Gen. Halleck's army, writes to that journal as follows: (Passing out to the front yesterday, "Passing out to the front yesterday, I lobserved that on the spurs of the ridges between the ravines to the left of the Purdy road, field works were in process of construction. They consisted of regular works, with parapets, embrasures, flanking faces, traveress, &c., the whole flanked by abattis, and protested in front by chrosus de fries. cted in front by chevaux de frie With such works as these commanding the with such worse as these commanding the various roads leading out of the place, no force could make a successful attack upon the camp. The Extinction of Slavery.

All the indications point to the extinction of Blavery as the certain, inevitable in number, and every way, to that of the Rebellion. Many felt that it would be so, from the beginning, and we feel proped in classing ourselves among the property with the control of the Rebellion. Many felt that it would, but the feel proped in classing ourselves among the beginning, and we feel proped in classing ourselves among the beginning and we dispair in making it out. But we are inclined to think that Gen. Halleck will not go into the fortification business, to any that to only that it would, but the first conditions of the circumstances, spend much time on the property. The exclusion of black men from carring the mails, solely on account of their color, was based upon the same principle as the refusal to recognize Hayti and Liberia. The repeal of the exclusion will mark the emancipation of the public mind from those petty meannesses to which it was subjected under the rule of Slavery.

The total force of the rebols, according to reports found at the headquarters of General Magnuder, was less than secenty thousand. No great battle is expected at Williamsburg, as the rebel troops, particularly those under Magruder, have mutined on several occasions within two weeks. Fire thousand of his men threatened to lay down their arms unless they received food and clothing.
