forts still held out.

There were twenty-one mortar schooners, each catrying one mortar. These terrible engines were made in this city, as were those on the mortar boats of Com. Foote, and not one has proved defective.

At length it was resolved to run the guantiet past these forts. A strong chain was strung across the river opposite the forts, and above the chain were the gunboats and iron-bound monster rams of the boats and iron-bound monster rams of the reads. Our fleat did not contain one iron-fleat of the worst. In the forts because the street destroying their last laws trended to his standard? Why, it had already filled every nook and corner of the land with his minions. It was a foregone conclusion—their acknowledgment of Jeff.
