WEDNESDAY MORNING, MAY 21. THE REPUBLICAN COURTY COMMITTEE will meet at the office of S. Schover, Jr., Esq., No. 139 Pourth st., on Saturday, May 24th 1862, at ten o'clock, a. m. Punctual and full attendance is requested.

The President's Proclamation. We were not surprised with the fact of the President's proclamation, reversing or modifying, or rather disavowing the Emancipation Order of Gen. HUNTER, nor with the manner and spirit in which the disavowal is couched. We anticipated something of the kind, judging of the past policy, and well known views of the Presi-and, judging from his stand-point, he has felt it to be his duty to modify Gen. Hun-TER's order, and thus extend a still longer day of grace to the infatuated slaveholding rebels, before the stern decree shall go rid themselves peaceably of an institution which must otherwise forcibly fall.

Observe, also, that he does not disclaim the power which Gen. HUNTER exercised. He rather admits it, but reserves the exercise of it to himself. It is a power too great, too potent, too immense in its effects. to be trusted to any hands less than those of the Chief of the Nation. Here is a great point gained; the admission by the President of a power which, if he thinks it wise to exercise it, may with one stroke of his pen destroy slavery forever.

If the pro-slavery fanatics and Border State men can derive any comfort from this Proclamation, they are welcome to it, They but snatch at straws to save them selves from the fearful gulf which is opening for their reception. We rejoice that Gen. HUNTER's order has afforded the President the opportunity to send forth from the White House so solemn a denunciation of slavery. It must carry dismay to every lover of the institution. Such is the confidence the people feel in the soundness and good sense of the President, that they will acquiesce heartily in his decision in this matter. They know he sympathizes as strongly with the anti- Probable Scene in the London Times slavery sentiment as any man in the land, and that he is as anxious as the most impatient for the glorious words to be uttered, that no slave breathes in America. Thus knowing, thus trusting him, they acquiesce cheerfully in his decision, and wait with confidence the final and glorious result. We do not think the revoking of General will be recalled, he will hardly be so foolish as to resign, as his enemies intimate He will go on with his great work of con diers exposed in that sickly region, and the President is a man of too much humanity and justice not to acquiesce hearily in a policy which will relieve our troops from much hardship and danger, while it subdue the rebellion."

(Russell reads)

The policy of arming the negroes to man the forts, and to discharge the duties most dangerous to Y. Post. Northern white soldiers, we trust will be initiated also in Gen. Burnen's district initiated also in Gen. Buller's district, in ecstacles; their orchards are bouquets; where no Union sentiment has developed their fields are living green; and every-itself, and where nothing but a strong mil-thing gives promise of another year of itary power can keep the rebellious inhabitants in subjection.

General Halleck. The following personal description General Halleck is given by a correspo dent of the Boston Journal:

"He has a fine physique—is stout, burly weighs two hundred avoirdupois, has a round head, is middled aged, black hair filling fast with allver. He walks by the in front of his quarters, his thun in the arm pits of his vest, looking mostly as the ground, but casting quick looks, now to the right, now to the left, evidently not for the purpose of seeing anything or anybody, but staring into vacancy the while. His eyes see only the problem before him which with the forces under him he is to Work out to a satisfactory conclusion. He is bronzed already, and in complexion reminds one of Daniel Webster, though not noct important question that came before so dark hued as Webster. Such is his per the Select Committee of the Senate on conis bronzed already, and in complexion reminds one of Daniel Webster, though not so dark heed as Webster. Such is his personal appearance. I understand that he does business off hand, is impacted that he sold ways. I am informed that he puts on accitizen's dress and valks through the camp. The other day she helped a teamster out of the mud, then gave him a teamster out of the mud, then gave him a severe lecture for not driving carefully. The teamster had flounded there, through it, and having reached the top of the bluff, and being in sight of head quarters, relieved himself of volley after welley of eaths upon the creek, his horses, the roads, and lastly upon General Hallesk for not having the creek bridged. The criticism was just; but the General had already ordered the construction of a bridge, and being intege, could enjoy the yerbal castigation. The army evidently has confidence in its commander, though I doubt if he is known personally to many of the officers and very few of the men."

The papers received by the Great Eastern, generally concede that there is some danger of intervention, or interference of some kind, in our affairs, by the French Emperor, provided that the rebellion is not crushed out this spring. The notion is entertained in Europe that a summer campaign is not possible in this country. The failure, then, to subdue the rebellion by the first of July, is considered as tantamount to protracting the war another year, and thus subjecting Europe to all the hardships consequent on the war. Against such a result it is 'said the Emperor is inclined to protest. He will endeavor to junite England with him, but, failing in this, he will

There can be no question that the President is a sincere and firm opponent of slayers, and that he looks to its complete overthrow, as the legitimate result of the corethrow as the legitimate result of the sympathizes with the spirit and practice of the sympathizes with the sympathize sympathizes with the spirit and practice of Gen. Hurre, and that had the question no wider consideration than the three States especially concerned, that he would not have interfered in the matter.

In his position of President of the whole people, he has larger interests to consider than those which come under the purview of the commander of a military district, and, judging from his stand-point, he has felt it to be his duty to modify Gen. How.

Emperor would then resort is bolieved be this—he would throw out something capable of being interest as a discrete state of being interest as a discrete party should resume hostilities; and he would then formally proposed as a threat against whichever party should resume hostilities; and he would then resort is bolieved be the this—he would throw out something capable of being interest as a division of being threat capable of being interest as a division of the confideration o

Minister at Washington to the Confederate government at Richmond has any connec-tion with those intentions is matter only of unassisted conjecture; but there is more forth from the Head of the Nation, that Slavery shall cease to exist.

But observe how gently and kindly he revokes the act of his subordinate, and how solemnly he points the slaveholders to their impending fate. He warns them to observe the signs of the times. He tells them that it may become a necessity indispensible to the maintenance of the Government for than conjecture as to something like what what the Confederate States idid in the string of last year. They did then, as the Army and Navy, that terrible power which they so much fear, but which he has not seen proper to delegate to any subordinate, and he beseeches them to accept the offer he has already made them, and thus rid themselves peaceably of an institution that which the North has refused and re-sisted at such enormous cost, it would grant at the request or menace of France; and it is equally difficult to see what effective steps France could take were she denied and defied. If the Emperor interferes in our quarrel, it will be most disastrous for himself and the French people. It will not facilitate the exportation of cotton by a single day, but will rather defer it, while it will completely destroy the French trade with this country, which is now reviving. He had better let us alone.
