This gallant officer, who is in the heart inexorably from their soil, and yet they so both, to-day, are even more determined to give no grace to slavery than even Massachusetts herself. Everywhere it is preminently a white man's question. Which civilization shall rule this continent—that which honors labor, or that which degrades labor? that which encourages intelligence, or that which stifles intelligence? that which enlarges civil rights, or that which curtails and destroys them? When it once comes to this, the free people of the North can make but one answer. Slavery will have to go to the wall. How this shall sudden turn of the road, been surprised inexorably from their soil, and yet the both, to-day, are even more determined to sion is presented—Major General Hunter is no doubt a montrous ogre and fanatio, but let us give him credit for one thing. He has audaciously attempted to lay his warrior hand upon the preclous casket of slavery, and for this has been greeted with the hatred of all its worshippers; but he has been successful in leading thousands to approve the President's proclemation boliey, who, when that policy was enuncito approve the President's proclamation policy, who, when that policy was enunciated, received it with undisguised horror. I complain of nobody for changing wrong for right opinions. There are few sights more agreeable. In the joy that has been excited by the President's correction of Hunters proclamation, among the sympathizers of the Secession school, his great plan of emancipationis generally accepted as wise, well timed and practical. In the Border States this feeling has become powerful. General Hunter can, at any rate, console himself that if he has not liberated the slewes of his military district, he has in order. directly enabled a good many of those who have lately opposed the President's policy, to liberate themselves from their unjust and unworthy prejudices.
