SATURDAY MORNING, JUNE 7.

The Battle Before Richmond.

We have already given a description of the battles of Saturday and Sunday, called by Gen. McCLELLAN, the battle of Fair Oaks, from a correspondent of the New-York Times. We give to-day another description, by a correspondent of the New York Tribune, who, the editor says, was on the ground during the whole fight, and the letter gives internal evidence that such was the case. We have seldom read a more vivid description, than that of the fight of Saturday.

What is most singular, the correspondent of the Times defended Gen. CASEY'S division, and thus discredited Gen. McCLELLAN'S dispatch; while the correspondent of the Tribune, who personally witnessed the scene, justifies all that McCLELLAN says. As McCLELLAN, in correcting his dispatch, several days after the battle, uses the words "Casey's division gave way unaccountably and discreditably," he must have facts to justify his language. We regret to have to publish such things of our troops, but the real facts should be known.

We do not blame the men so much as those who commanded them. There are just as good men in that division as any other, but men have to be well disciplined, well cared for, well handled, and must have confidence in their officers, to fight well. That they did not stand is evident from the fact that the division lost so few men; at least very few have yet been reported.

The following is a description of the division:

GENERAL CASEY'S DIVISION.

This division is composed as follows:
Brig. Gen. Silas Casey, Commanding Division.
Major Crosby, Medical Director.
Capt. H. W. Smith, Assistant Adjutant General.
Capt. Engel, Quartermaster.
Lieut. Garrington Raymond, Aid-de-camp.
Lieut. E. W. West, Aid-de-camp.
Lieut. Foster, Aid-de-camp.

9th Independent New York Battery—Capt. Fitch.
Battery A—Capt. Bates.
Battery B—Capt. Spratt.

The Instructions to Governors Stanton, of North Carolina, and Johnson, of Tennessee--Letter from the Secretary of War.

The following correspondence explains itself:

SIR: In answer to the resolution of the Senate, adopted on the 2d inst., I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of the letter appointing Hon. Edward Stanley Military Governor of North Carolina, and also a copy of the instructions he received from this Department. The appointment of Hon. Andrew Johnson as Military Governor was the same, in its terms, as that to Mr. Stanley.

Very respectfully,
EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

Hon. H. HAMLIN, President Senate.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 19, 1862.

To Hon. Ed. Stanley, etc., etc.:

SIR: You are hereby appointed Military Governor of North Carolina, with authority to exercise and perform, within the limits of that State, all and singular, the powers, duties, and functions pertaining to the office of Military Governor (including the power to establish all necessary offices and tribunals, and suspend the writ of habeas corpus) during the pleasure of the President, or until the loyal inhabitants of that State shall organize a civil Government in conformity with the Constitution of the United States.

EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, D. C., May 20, 1862.

Sir: The commission you have received expresses on its face the nature and extent of the duties and powers devolved upon you by the appointment as Military Governor of North Carolina.

Instructions have been given to Major Gen. Burnside to aid you in the performance of your duty, and the exercise of your authority. He has also been instructed to detail an adequate military force for the special purpose of a Governor's guard, and to act under your directions.

It is obvious to you that the great purpose of your appointment is to re-establish the authority of the Federal Government in the State of North Carolina, and to provide the means of maintaining peace and security to the loyal inhabitants of that State, until they shall be able to establish a civil Government. Upon your wisdom and energetic action much will depend in accomplishing that result. It is not deemed necessary to give any specific instruction, but rather to confide in your sound discretion, to adopt such measures as circumstances may demand. Specific instructions will be given when requested. You may rely upon the perfect confidence and full support of the Department in the performance of your duties.

With respect, I am your ob't servant,
EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

The Claim of the National Intelligencer.

The Controller of the Treasury has refused to audit the claim of the National Intelligencer for $35,500, under the resolution of the House directing that sum to be paid out of the Contingent Fund for the Annals of Congress. The Controller says that the Contingent Fund can only be applied to certain regular contingencies already provided for by law, and that a new expenditure must be covered by a special appropriation. It is to be feared that the Intelligencer will be put to the trouble of having another bill passed, and the country to the trouble of perusing another "ugly record."

We hope the House will not vote away the money needed for the war for any such purpose. Congress does not need the books, and they will be as safe where they are as any where else, should they ever be wanted. The Intelligencer has been amply paid already, and has no claims on Congress or the country. Up to the last minute it opposed emancipation in the District, and it has opposed every one of the grand measures which have made this Congress immortal.

TWO OF THE SAME MIND.—The following item comes from Indianapolis:

A gentleman who just arrived from Washington, says that Gen. Mitchell recently telegraphed to Secretary Stanton for authority to hang some rebel guerrillas, whom he had captured, and the Secretary answered him to swing them up.

THE BATTLE OF THE SEVEN PINES.

BLOODY CHECK SUSTAINED BY THE UNION ADVANCE.

The Causes of Our Defeat.

&c., &c., &c.

SAVAGE'S STATION, York River and Richmond R. R., Saturday, May 31, 1862.

At 1 o'clock this afternoon a musketry fire in front of the left wing and upon Casey's Division, told us that the enemy had commenced the fight, which policy and necessity had suspended on our part. The storm of last night was the most furious fall of rain and explosion of lightning I ever saw. Not a regiment, not a company, scarcely an officer was exempt from its chilling and exhausting effects. The Rebels seized upon it as an element of military advantage, and, having fully prepared themselves, fell suddenly on our pickets, scattered them inwards, and held Casey's regiments in actual battle while their pots and kettles were yet on the fires and many of the men were drying their wet clothes. I cannot tell in the confusion, which now reigns supreme, how the small earthwork and the rifle-pit at the front were so quickly taken out of our possession. The number and the quality of the guns in the fort I am ignorant of. But pits, fort, and guns, whether of siege or field, changed owners suddenly.

Now I face the first truth in the history of the Union disgrace at the Seven Pines—and I shall not dodge it. The important place of danger, the front, was committed to a General whose division was composed of raw troops marched down Fourteenth street, in Washington, the last week of February, 13,000 strong—and has been so neglected and so allowed to go undisciplined, that 7,000 of them could not by any possibility have been gathered together this morning—a division so lost, literally lost, 700 men and upward since it left Williamsburg—a division whose commander has long been conspicuous as searching, miles ahead of his marching columns, for a spot of place in the front, the shock of battle fell—and knocked it into disorder and ruin faster than I conceived it possible for Anglo-Saxon troops to be moved by any power less than God's thunderbolts. Oh! how much I have learned to-day, and how much I have unlearned!

Gen. Peck's military family were at their rice and coffee in the open air at a quarter before one o'clock in the afternoon. The unmistakable rattle of musketry fired by companies and by column in front, brought the greatest rate of every battle-field in Mexico right to his feet. He mounted instantly and ordered his brigade under arms. In the short space of time consumed by me in rolling up my blankets and overcoat, and saddling a restless horse, and riding twenty rods toward the front—not twenty minutes—the current of straggling and skulking had fully set in, and was sweeping in a great shameful flow down the Williamsburg road. It was the most astonishing of spectacles. Great, healthy, vigorous men, who had volunteered to fight the battles of Freedom, walking rapidly back from the first touch of the foe, with boxes full of cartridges and muskets in their hands, sound in wind and limb, but, thank God! looking mean as sheep-thieves when they encountered the stare of brave men, and simulating lameness and every form of sickness when cavaliers met, not combatants by profession. I damned them in their fury for cowards, and endeavored to breast them back-ward with their troops, falling into every possible variety of limp out of rapid, strong walking; depressing disabling disease as a justification for going at pleasure either shoulder with terrible wounds; quickly gathering into their bosoms mutilated arms, wholly untouched with bullets; going through the whole disgusting panto mime of sickness of the stomach in reply to fierce questions as to where they were going, and why the devil they were not fighting; with false speech and faster looks, assuming every conceivable accent to attack of heavy fire, they were charged upon in overwhelming numbers, and scattered, with what is not known.

Col. Van Wyck was struck by a shell which did not explode. The blow fell on his saber, which was bent, with the sword within, to a complete right angle. The Colonel was knocked down and disabled, but not permanently injured.

Gen. Doven is shot through the fleshy part of the calf of the leg. The wound, while disabling, is not serious.

Eight o'clock—Good News!—Richardson and Heintzelman and Hooker are said to have dashed at them in front. The statement goes electrically from group of wounded to group of wounded, all through the grounds of this country seat, that the rebels ran like sheep. The fire recedes, and its diminishing volume and distinctness denote a flight on their part and a pursuit on ours. What a retributive termination of the battle begun with odds against us yesterday, would be the march of Heintzelman into Richmond this afternoon, fighting as he went, and whipping as he fought! God grant us the communication!

P. S.—Joseph Roberts, Company K, Fifth Michigan, had a small pistol ball pass through his pantaloons, and it molded itself around the lock of the pistol, where it remains. Mr. R. lost a finger by the next shot. Col. Cochrane is safe.

GREAT LOSS OF LIFE BEFORE RICHMOND SATURDAY AND SUNDAY LAST.

FORTRESS MONROE, June 3.—Beyond doubt, the loss of life on both sides before Richmond on Saturday and Sunday last, was much greater than the country has any idea of. The loss on our side was principally on Saturday, when we were surprised. I am informed, on authority that I deem trustworthy, that two thousand of our wounded have been collected, and that accommodations for three thousand more are required. Several gentlemen who came from the White House to-day, and were on the field during the engagement, place our loss at from six to eight thousand, and that of the enemy much more. Prisoners and contrabands place the figure from ten to fifteen thousand. Every place in Richmond was filled with the wounded, where no sense of disaster was universal.

The fighting on Sunday would appear to have been nearly as much in our favor as it was against us on Saturday. Gen. Meagher's brigade is represented as having made a most brilliant charge, and the conduct of the troops generally very excellent.

I have been unable to obtain more than a few of the names of the killed and wounded. Col. Riker of the Anderson Zouaves, New York, was killed. His embalmed body leaves by the Baltimore boat to-night. Gen. Howes of Maine had his arm taken off. Col. Miller, of the 81st Pennsylvania, had his head shot off. Major Culph, 57th Pennsylvania, was killed. Col. Rowley, 102 (old 15th) Pennsylvania, was wounded slightly in the head. Gen. Divens of Massachusetts and Col. Briggs, of the 10th Massachusetts, were slightly wounded.

It is represented that the ground for miles was covered with the killed and wounded of both sides. On Saturday night the two armies lay so near to each other that neither could carry off their wounded. The next day all the ground previously lost was regained, and the enemy driven a mile and a half. To-day we await with anxiety the result.

Emancipation in the House.

A special dispatch to the New York Tribune gives the following account of the proceedings, on Wednesday, in the House, on the emancipation bill:

The majority by which the House reconsidered its rejection of the bill liberating the slaves of rebels, and recommitted it to the Select Committee, astounded the Democrats, and surprised the most sanguine Republicans. No one looked for more than 10 majority, but the motion to reconsider prevailed by 19. The conserve-slavery party had every man on the ground, including Col. Fouke, brought all the way from Illinois, and moved a call of the House, to render every man's attendance a certainty.

When the House met the seats on the Democratic side seemed the fullest; and the leaders hoped for victory through Republican absenteeism, which has several times this session secured the passage of a bad bill or the defeat of a good one. Three Republicans only willfully stopped their cars, viz: Messrs. Granger, of Michigan, against whom former friends talk very bitterly, some even going so far as to call him a traitor to the party by which he was elected.

Mr. Horton, of Ohio, and Mr. Diven, of New York, paired with Mr. Olin, who voted for the bill last week. Mr. Harrison, of Ohio, who voted with Mr. Horton, is not classed as a Republican. The two Rhode Island members and the Democratic members from Connecticut, voted against reconsideration. All the Massachusetts members, except Judge Thomas, who was elected as a Unionist, voted for reconsideration.

Mr. Porter's substitute for the original bill, which the Select Committee was instructed to report back, and which will doubtless pass in substantially its present form, is framed upon the model of the Confiscation bill which has already passed the House.

It frees the slaves of the same enumerated classes of ringleaders, whose property is confiscated immediately, and provides, like the Confiscation bill, for freeing the slaves of all other rebels who remain such sixty days after public proclamation and warning by the President. Most of the other sections of the bill relate to the machinery by which freedom is ascertained and continued.

A section disqualifying from holding office all those whose slaves are free under the bill, and providing for voluntary colonization, secured at least two votes. The Committee will probably be unable to report for a fortnight, as it must wait until regularly called. But a reconsideration was inevitable since it would otherwise have been impossible to put it forward, the time having passed within which it was possible to reconsider the vote that sent the bill to its third reading. It is not improbable the Confiscation bill, somewhat amended, will meantime come down from the Senate.
