The Complaints of the Partizans of Military of the second

The newspaper correspondents in the army of the Potomac agree with singular unanimity that Gen. McClellan must have reinforcements before he can make any offensive demonstrations against Richmond; and a few of them, moved thereunto, no idoubt, by the crumbs which fall from the tables of Generals who tolerate such nuisances, are somewhat loud in their censures of the Administration in sending forward those reinforcements so tardily, and for not stripping Banks, Shields and Fremont of their commands: to help the "Young Napoleon" out of the Chickshomithe Administration, in withholding troops necessary to the sure defence of the Capital; but in Gen. McClellan in putting himself in a position where those troops cannot, while contributing to the security of Washington, swell his offensive force to such a number that its movements would be the capital by convering army that could be the capital by the covernment in order to not, while contributing to the security of Washington, swell his offensive force to such a number that its movements would crush any opposing army that could be brought against it. The error dates from the time when Gen. McClellan, against the admonitions of wiser heads than his, determined to make no pursuit of a frightened and flying foc, but to undertake his Peninsular campaign. By the direct and always practicable route, he could have been in Richmond more than six weeks ago, with Fremont, Banks, Shields and their averal columns at his heels. And if these flewspaper correspondents, who are blowing up the Administration for not making bricks without straw, are not all the while half drunk on the program to griph of the promised million.

The supedition to the Tyrol is a phantament of order to sender to suppress the right of assign to session to redet to suppress the right of assign to the present actions in Italy. Ghribaldi never dreamed of passing the Minister Promised a million (of francs). The Minister promised a million (of francs) and an animantion. From Naples the following telegram to Garibaldi in as only to send a receipt and indicate the spot.

"Again, the government has already given a portion of the promised million."

RATAZZI'S DEFENCE.

This statement created great excitement. Ratazzi's defence was lame. He said that the million was required to send certain exiles out of Italy, and that he never promised Garibaldi anything except the anticles out of Italy, and that he never promised Garibaldi anything except the national armament for the independence and unity of Italy. Crispi msintained that he mover promised Garibaldi anything except the national armament for the independence and unity of Italy. Crispi msintained that he inverted the sound."

Pitts burghers Amantament of the Setting of the Minister Promised an illing of the Minister Promised an illing of frances, and their several columns at his heels. And if these flewspaper correspondents, who are been in Richmon. Minister Promised an illing "shoulders that should over it in the meantime the country ought, in justice to Gen. McClellah, to understand that the campaign, since the disembarkation at rotress Monroe, has cost the army more than 25.000 men—double the number necessary to have sacrificed in the pursuit of the enemy and occupation of Richmond, if the blunder had not been committed.

RICHNOND, a letter to the Charleston
