THE LOSS.

And who can estimate our loss, when none but an Omnipotent eye can, in the confusion of the first hours that follow the engagement, search out the fate of all who appear not with their comrades as they gather with their regiments at night? It will surely exceed the their comrades as they gather with their regiments at night? It will surely exceed the thousand, and I hop not pass the 1,500; but a few days more will tell, while, meanwhile, the list must swell greatly, for the battle is not yet fully ended. Strategy or no strategy, there must still be desporate fighting, even though the rebels should play into our hands to the end, as itbey are reported to have done to-day in seeking to possess themselves of the communications with White Honse, little thinking, probably, how far advanced were the preparations for changing to a now and battle base on the James River, where our gamboats can afford us full protection, and shall have but a single flank to guard.

OUR MEN BETTHE REVEUY.

That night an order came from Gen. McClellan for Gen. McClellan for Gen. Portor to withdraw his forces gradually to a point near Meadow's Bridge.

After a few hours' sleep upon their arms, our troops were aroused, and, in accordance with the plan of operations, Gen. McCall, at three o'clock, opened a fire of artillery on the enemy, who vigorously responded, until our forces began gradually to retire before them as if retreating, but maintaining their ranks in good order, crossing a bridge over a creek on the way, destroying it behind them, compelling the enemy to wait the slow construction of a new passage-way in the fire of our opposing artillery and heavy musketry fire from the with Massachusetts.
