But the right thing leing done at last, and done by such an overwhelming majority vote, too, we have no desire to be severe in thus glancing at the long-delayed action of Congress in this matter.

Congress in this matter.

Congress has done its part—what remains now is for the Executive Power to give effect, in every State where the Robellion has prevailed, to the will of the people as embodied in the Act of Emancipation. We will not, we cannot, believe that Mr. Lingous is either inert in will or timid in purpose, like some of the time-serving politicians whose obstructive dead-weight was two often felt during the late session of Congress. Ju 25: oav dow MORGAN DISAPPOINTED .- The Cincinnati Gazette, of Saturday, says:

A gentleman from Kentucky, informs as that Morgan expressed himself as disgusted with the reception he received in that State. He expected a general rising of those in sympathy with the rebel cause; but he was disappointed. He intended to remain in the State, but found it necessary, for the reason stated, to change his purpose. The guerfilla chief discovered that it is easier to talk than fight, and that brave talkers are usually among the last to risk their lives.
