

Unless the North Arises it is Lost.

The Richmond Examiner admits that the North is superior in numbers, in arms, in equipments, in ships, in all mechanical appliances, but that it lacks what the South has got—that is soul.

The South is in a desperate earnest now needs no argument, but we present further evidence in the following extracts from an intelligent gentleman who has spent several years in the South, and who has served the Confederate Government in an official capacity in Richmond for several months, and who made his escape with great difficulty.

The North will, perhaps never fully comprehend the magnitude of the malice hatred which the rebel South entertains toward her, a hatred which has exhibited itself in a greater or less degree for years in the arrogant tone of the Southern press, in the insolence of slaveholding Congressmen, and in the trampling and occasional murder of peaceful Northerners, and in the senseless ferocity of their mobs.

It is fully to be expected that the Union can be restored and the law of the nation maintained at the South until such time as the Government and people of the North shall become convinced with touching of the earnestness and determination which characterizes the Rebels.

The Rebels blindly follow their leaders, and are not unfrequently misled by their principles, and lying press of the South, which habitually misrepresents and distorts everything relating to the North.

Then the Southern heart is fired by exhortations, and the revolutionary measures which will hold out a little longer the battle of freedom, as they deem it.

The most remarkable phenomenon that strikes the exile who enters the free air of the North from the South, is in the total absence of all the signs and tokens of a war, so constantly before our eyes in the South.

The starvation policy is a good one, though it has not yet justified the expectations of the most sanguine. I have no hesitation in admitting at once that the efforts of the North to conquer a peace and a restoration of the Union with slavery, will never be the better.

The Rebels are gathering up all able-bodied slaves and setting them to work upon the railroad and in the Quartermaster's Department.

A Rebel Iron-Clad Navy.

If the news of the arrival of an iron-clad fleet at Mobile be true, it is of immense importance. We cannot see how such a fleet could have been built and dispatched by the rebels without the knowledge of our Government.

Lieutenant George B. McClellan and the Cuban Junta. The connection of Lieutenant George B. McClellan with the Cuban Junta, is a subject which has long been a source of speculation.

More Slave-Catching in Our Camps. That a large number of slaves are being sent from the rebel States to the Federal States, is a fact which has long been a source of speculation.

General Mitchell going to Cincinnati. General Mitchell is reported to be going to Cincinnati, where he will be engaged in some business.

What the Country Asks—Will Its Voice be Heeded? The country asks that the Government should be more active in its efforts to restore the Union.

The National Intelligence.

The Argonauts this morning make an excellent point against the Intelligence, which journal is taking very strong ground of late against the rebels.
