

Pittsburgh Gazette.

SATURDAY MORNING, AUG. 9.

Recruiting.

The business of recruiting is going on here with a vigor never before equalled since the commencement of the war. We do not believe that any city or county of the same population will turn out more soldiers than Allegheny county and its numerous cities and villages. Thousands of our citizens have gone, and are preparing to go to the field for the defense of their country. If the spirit of recruiting keeps up as it has begun and continued up to this point, a few days longer, we shall place not only our quota of the first call for three hundred thousand volunteers, but also our quota of the men to be drafted. If this should be the case will the draft extend to us? We should think it ought not. If we volunteer our full share, we ought certainly to be exempt from the draft.

"The Sword of Freedom."

Says Mr. Wilkinson, in one of his letters to the New York Tribune, is "Liberator." "In such a contest as this—a contest waged by Slavery against Freedom—the sword of freedom is Linck."

Hitherto the policy of the war, on the part of the Government, and of the greater number of the governments to which it gave the command of its armies, has been not to draw a sword, but rather to award less scabbard. This war has been, on some grand review occasions, a most spectacular, never had any similar significance, for it had no inspiring purpose—not even a declared policy of "liberation," political, will wage such as the do-nothing general, of the slave-hating, rebel-loving type, like the McClellans and Burnside will wage a war of this kind, we say, is not sym- bolized by the sword, but by the scabbard.

The war, however, has had its day—a long, inglorious day—on which the reverted eye of memory will not delight to dwell. The President has solemnly promised a change and the freedom-loving thousands of brave men who are rushing to the rescue of their slaves and the subjection of the Slave Power, the conquest of the Slave Power.

The South feuds with the North, and will never again co-operate with the South.

We conclude by quoting the eloquent passage from Mr. Wilkinson's letter, to which we have already alluded:

"The right of self-government is not dreamed of by the idiot or lunatic in all this land. It is not possible for the war to have any other conclusion than the subjection of the Slave Power, or the conquest of the Slave Power."

The Northwest and the Army.

In the afternoon of the day of his arrest the traitor's wife called upon Gen. Negley and his family to take her husband to the hospital to receive medical attention.

"Sister, Present Marshal."

Soldier's fare, Hon. A. O. P. Slocum, avowed traitor to his country and for so long a time a sympathizer with the South, and was still a sympathizer with the rebellion; but he had made up his mind to fight, and requested that he might take the oath.

"A. S. Slocum, Brigadier General."

Great excitement followed the receipt of the news of the capture of the traitor before the news of his execution had been received. The Senator Nichelson took a prominent part, and Gen. Negley ordered his arrest.

ORDER OF ARREST.

"HEADQUARTERS U. S. FORCES,

Camp, July 28, 1862.

Brigadier General Marshall:

Soldier's fare, Hon. A. O. P. Slocum, avowed traitor to his country and for so long a time a sympathizer with the South, and was still a sympathizer with the rebellion; but he had made up his mind to fight, and requested that he might take the oath.

"A. S. Slocum, Brigadier General."

Great excitement.

A large number of gentlemen called upon Gen. Negley, many of them regretting, being loyal men, and desirous for his release. But Gen. Negley informed them that he had been informed by political strategy, will demand that the pledge be redeemed. Already, indeed, the first steps have been taken in the direction of earnestness and vigor, but the drawing of the sword of freedom is what yet remains—the only essential act which will truly mark the turning-point of the contest. Let the President, in accordance with the emancipation clause in two sets of Congress, both which he has duly approved, proclaim liberty to all the slaves of Congress, and to those of the Slave Power, and to the slaves of the Slave Power, and to the slaves of the Slave Power.

The South feuds with the North, and will never again co-operate with the South.

Armenia and Democracy is dissolved.

Twelve days ago, at Harrison's Bar, my sick grandfather, at the advanced age of 80, died and expired, leaving behind him a widow and a family, wife and four children, and a son, who is a soldier in the ranks of the Union.

God is with us, and we are implacably at war.

The traitor's wife, Mrs. Negley, had been impaled on the sword of freedom.

Gold is in this nation doomed to destruction.

It is not possible for the war to have any other conclusion than the subjection of the Slave Power, or the conquest of the Slave Power.

The Northwest and the Army.

In the afternoon of the day of his arrest the traitor's wife called upon Gen. Negley and his family to take her husband to the hospital to receive medical attention.

"Sister, Present Marshal."

Soldier's fare, Hon. A. O. P. Slocum, avowed traitor to his country and for so long a time a sympathizer with the South, and was still a sympathizer with the rebellion; but he had made up his mind to fight, and requested that he might take the oath.

"A. S. Slocum, Brigadier General."

Great excitement.

A large number of gentlemen called upon Gen. Negley, many of them regretting, being loyal men, and desirous for his release. But Gen. Negley informed them that he had been informed by political strategy, will demand that the pledge be redeemed. Already, indeed, the first steps have been taken in the direction of earnestness and vigor, but the drawing of the sword of freedom is what yet remains—the only essential act which will truly mark the turning-point of the contest. Let the President, in accordance with the emancipation clause in two sets of Congress, both which he has duly approved, proclaim liberty to all the slaves of Congress, and to those of the Slave Power, and to the slaves of the Slave Power.

The South feuds with the North, and will never again co-operate with the South.

Armenia and Democracy is dissolved.

Twelve days ago, at Harrison's Bar, my sick grandfather, at the advanced age of 80, died and expired, leaving behind him a widow and a family, wife and four children, and a son, who is a soldier in the ranks of the Union.

God is with us, and we are implacably at war.

The traitor's wife, Mrs. Negley, had been impaled on the sword of freedom.

Gold is in this nation doomed to destruction.

It is not possible for the war to have any other conclusion than the subjection of the Slave Power, or the conquest of the Slave Power.

The Northwest and the Army.

In the afternoon of the day of his arrest the traitor's wife called upon Gen. Negley and his family to take her husband to the hospital to receive medical attention.

"Sister, Present Marshal."

Soldier's fare, Hon. A. O. P. Slocum, avowed traitor to his country and for so long a time a sympathizer with the South, and was still a sympathizer with the rebellion; but he had made up his mind to fight, and requested that he might take the oath.

"A. S. Slocum, Brigadier General."

Great excitement.

A large number of gentlemen called upon Gen. Negley, many of them regretting, being loyal men, and desirous for his release. But Gen. Negley informed them that he had been informed by political strategy, will demand that the pledge be redeemed. Already, indeed, the first steps have been taken in the direction of earnestness and vigor, but the drawing of the sword of freedom is what yet remains—the only essential act which will truly mark the turning-point of the contest. Let the President, in accordance with the emancipation clause in two sets of Congress, both which he has duly approved, proclaim liberty to all the slaves of Congress, and to those of the Slave Power, and to the slaves of the Slave Power.

The South feuds with the North, and will never again co-operate with the South.

Armenia and Democracy is dissolved.

Twelve days ago, at Harrison's Bar, my sick grandfather, at the advanced age of 80, died and expired, leaving behind him a widow and a family, wife and four children, and a son, who is a soldier in the ranks of the Union.

God is with us, and we are implacably at war.

The traitor's wife, Mrs. Negley, had been impaled on the sword of freedom.

Gold is in this nation doomed to destruction.

It is not possible for the war to have any other conclusion than the subjection of the Slave Power, or the conquest of the Slave Power.

The Northwest and the Army.

In the afternoon of the day of his arrest the traitor's wife called upon Gen. Negley and his family to take her husband to the hospital to receive medical attention.

"Sister, Present Marshal."

Soldier's fare, Hon. A. O. P. Slocum, avowed traitor to his country and for so long a time a sympathizer with the South, and was still a sympathizer with the rebellion; but he had made up his mind to fight, and requested that he might take the oath.

"A. S. Slocum, Brigadier General."

Great excitement.

A large number of gentlemen called upon Gen. Negley, many of them regretting, being loyal men, and desirous for his release. But Gen. Negley informed them that he had been informed by political strategy, will demand that the pledge be redeemed. Already, indeed, the first steps have been taken in the direction of earnestness and vigor, but the drawing of the sword of freedom is what yet remains—the only essential act which will truly mark the turning-point of the contest. Let the President, in accordance with the emancipation clause in two sets of Congress, both which he has duly approved, proclaim liberty to all the slaves of Congress, and to those of the Slave Power, and to the slaves of the Slave Power.

The South feuds with the North, and will never again co-operate with the South.

Armenia and Democracy is dissolved.

Twelve days ago, at Harrison's Bar, my sick grandfather, at the advanced age of 80, died and expired, leaving behind him a widow and a family, wife and four children, and a son, who is a soldier in the ranks of the Union.

God is with us, and we are implacably at war.

The traitor's wife, Mrs. Negley, had been impaled on the sword of freedom.

Gold is in this nation doomed to destruction.

It is not possible for the war to have any other conclusion than the subjection of the Slave Power, or the conquest of the Slave Power.

The Northwest and the Army.

In the afternoon of the day of his arrest the traitor's wife called upon Gen. Negley and his family to take her husband to the hospital to receive medical attention.

"Sister, Present Marshal."

Soldier's fare, Hon. A. O. P. Slocum, avowed traitor to his country and for so long a time a sympathizer with the South, and was still a sympathizer with the rebellion; but he had made up his mind to fight, and requested that he might take the oath.

"A. S. Slocum, Brigadier General."

Great excitement.

A large number of gentlemen called upon Gen. Negley, many of them regretting, being loyal men, and desirous for his release. But Gen. Negley informed them that he had been informed by political strategy, will demand that the pledge be redeemed. Already, indeed, the first steps have been taken in the direction of earnestness and vigor, but the drawing of the sword of freedom is what yet remains—the only essential act which will truly mark the turning-point of the contest. Let the President, in accordance with the emancipation clause in two sets of Congress, both which he has duly approved, proclaim liberty to all the slaves of Congress, and to those of the Slave Power, and to the slaves of the Slave Power.

The South feuds with the North, and will never again co-operate with the South.

Armenia and Democracy is dissolved.

Twelve days ago, at Harrison's Bar, my sick grandfather, at the advanced age of 80, died and expired, leaving behind him a widow and a family, wife and four children, and a son, who is a soldier in the ranks of the Union.

God is with us, and we are implacably at war.

The traitor's wife, Mrs. Negley, had been impaled on the sword of freedom.

Gold is in this nation doomed to destruction.

It is not possible for the war to have any other conclusion than the subjection of the Slave Power, or the conquest of the Slave Power.

The Northwest and the Army.

In the afternoon of the day of his arrest the traitor's wife called upon Gen. Negley and his family to take her husband to the hospital to receive medical attention.

"Sister, Present Marshal."

Soldier's fare, Hon. A. O. P. Slocum, avowed traitor to his country and for so long a time a sympathizer with the South, and was still a sympathizer with the rebellion; but he had made up his mind to fight, and requested that he might take the oath.

"A. S. Slocum, Brigadier General."

Great excitement.

A large number of gentlemen called upon Gen. Negley, many of them regretting, being loyal men, and desirous for his release. But Gen. Negley informed them that he had been informed by political strategy, will demand that the pledge be redeemed. Already, indeed, the first steps have been taken in the direction of earnestness and vigor, but the drawing of the sword of freedom is what yet remains—the only essential act which will truly mark the turning-point of the contest. Let the President, in accordance with the emancipation clause in two sets of Congress, both which he has duly approved, proclaim liberty to all the slaves of Congress, and to those of the Slave Power, and to the slaves of the Slave Power.

The South feuds with the North, and will never again co-operate with the South.

Armenia and Democracy is dissolved.

Twelve days ago, at Harrison's Bar, my sick grandfather, at the advanced age of 80, died and expired, leaving behind him a widow and a family, wife and four children, and a son, who is a soldier in the ranks of the Union.

God is with us, and we are implacably at war.

The traitor's wife, Mrs. Negley, had been impaled on the sword of freedom.

Gold is in this nation doomed to destruction.

It is not possible for the war to have any other conclusion than the subjection of the Slave Power, or the conquest of the Slave Power.

The Northwest and the Army.

In the afternoon of the day of his arrest the traitor's wife called upon Gen. Negley and his family to take her husband to the hospital to receive medical attention.

"Sister, Present Marshal."

Soldier's fare, Hon. A. O. P. Slocum, avowed traitor to his country and for so long a time a sympathizer with the South, and was still a sympathizer with the rebellion; but he had made up his mind to fight, and requested that he might take the oath.

"A. S. Slocum, Brigadier General."

Great excitement.

A large number of gentlemen called upon Gen. Negley, many of them regretting, being loyal men, and desirous for his release. But Gen. Negley informed them that he had been informed by political strategy, will demand that the pledge be redeemed. Already, indeed, the first steps have been taken in the direction of earnestness and vigor, but the drawing of the sword of freedom is what yet remains—the only essential act which will truly mark the turning-point of the contest. Let the President, in accordance with the emancipation clause in two sets of Congress, both which he has duly approved, proclaim liberty to all the slaves of Congress, and to those of the Slave Power, and to the slaves of the Slave Power.

The South feuds with the North, and will never again co-operate with the South.

Armenia and Democracy is dissolved.

Twelve days ago, at Harrison's Bar, my sick grandfather, at the advanced age of 80, died and expired, leaving behind him a widow and a family, wife and four children, and a son, who is a soldier in the ranks of the Union.

God is with us, and we are implacably at war.

The traitor's wife, Mrs. Negley, had been impaled on the sword of freedom.

Gold is in this nation doomed to destruction.

It is not possible for the war to have any other conclusion than the subjection of the Slave Power, or the conquest of the Slave Power.

The Northwest and the Army.

In the afternoon of the day of his arrest the traitor's wife called upon Gen. Negley and his family to take her husband to the hospital to receive medical attention.

"Sister, Present Marshal."