MONDAY MORNING, AUG. 18.

Signs of Encouragement. There is a more quiet and hopeful state of public mind now, then for months past. It would be difficult to tell exactly why this is, but it is very clear that it exists. country was greatly depressed after the disasters on the Peninsula, and the resotion subsequent may have had something to do with its present hopeful condition; but we think it mainly results from confidence in the change of policy and military leadthin at Weshington and military leadthin at Weshington and military leadtown in the State Senate to very general acership at Washington, and in the reliance which the public feels in such Generals as Pope, Burnside, Banks and Sigel. Ever since the Army of the Potomac set itself down in the swamps of the Chickshominy, and commenced to dig, there has been distrust, apprehension and depression. The hope that that gallant army may yet be extricated, and placed in a position to render to the country seme of the benefits expected from it, is greatly cheering and the burner of the b ing, and the buoyancy of the public mind Tril will be much increased when it is rendered certain that the army is fully and safely extricated.

The wonderful uprising of the people, at The wonderful uprising of the people, at the call of the President—the murvellous fact that a class of so called "peace demo-outpouring of money and of men to meet orats" is scattered all over the free States, the exigencies of the hour—has done much to exhibit ate the public mind. It is now on mischief, and, doubtless mischief as one and florgering as useful. on mischief, and, doubtless mischief as open and fiagrant as a connivance with the can get as many troops as it can arm and equip and handle, by voluntary enlistment ment would forego drafting, if it was not that we desired to see those selfish, half-disloyal neighborhoods which have done fittle or nothing, compelled to take some part in this great work of patriotism.

The hot season, so much dreaded by Northern men, is also passing away, and a long autumn season approaching, the a long autumn season approaching, the most favorable of any other for active duty in the field, but will be prepared for traitors in the field in the rebal States. in the field in the rebel States. Whether these states are the same of the country. Whether these are the reasons, or a part of them, which have imparted fresh ardor and encouragement to the people, is not of so much consequence as to know that such a confident state of feeling exists, and that from it we derive increased reliance upon the indomitable resolution of the people to restore the Union intact, with not one star erased from its flag.
