TUESDAY MORNING, AUG. 19.

All the hopes entertained by the rebels, of relief by intervention, have been destroyed by the Queen's prorogation speech. It amounces that "Her Majesty, having from the outset determined to take no part in the contest, has seen no reason to depart from the neutrality which she has steadily additionally additionally and the part in the contest, has seen no reason to depart from the neutrality which she has steadily additionally additionally and the partial ment will not meet again before winter, and probably spring, and see the

The ruin of their European hopes, and the terrible uprising of the North-pouring out men and money in the most extraordinary manner-must carry dismay to the are nearly numbered.

the last six weeks there has been more or less anxiety concerning the safety of that gallant army, and the news of its deliverance from its peril will be hailed with joy. It will now, doubtless, be placed in a position where it can co-operate with General Pope, in advancing on Richmond from the north. The rebel capital being relieved from all danger on the south, the whole rebel army will now be precipitated on Poze and Burnside, and it is to be feared that an effort will be made by Jackson to bring on a general engagement before McCeellan's army can get up. Our commanders will be aware of this danger and no doubt provide for it, but it is certain that agreat and bloody battle will be fought in the neighborhood of Richmond before many weeks, and that battle may decide many weeks, and that battle may decide the fate of the rebels before the new recruits are in a condition to take the field.

Cotton Culture in France. A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune

writes from Paris: The Marques de Foumes, or rather the intelligent steward of his estates, has been quietly making, on a small scale, a highly successful experiment of cotton-growing in France proper, of which experiment there is a particular and particularly interesting report, to be read in the June number of the Bulletin de la Societe d'Acclimation. I compress one or two of its essential statements.
Three ares, strictly 3-100 of a hectare, which Three are, strictly 3-100 of a hectare, which is a fraction less than 2½ acres—eay, roundly, about twelve square rods—were planted, under rather unfavorable circumstances, with a kilogramme, i. e., two pounds three ounces, nearly, of Algerine cotton-seed. The yield was 64 pounds of ginned cotton, pronounced by a manufacturer at Mulhouse, and by other experis, to be a fair quality of Sea Island, the value of which, as compared with the best Georgia Sea Island, is as 5½ to 9. The Marquis has a much larger surface under-cultivation this year. At sand by other experts, to be a fair quality of fees Island, the value of which, as compared with the best feerings as Island, is as 6j to 9. The Marquis hass much larger surface under coultwistion this year. At present prices it promises better returns than ordinary sgriculture. His first plantation is on the banks of the river Gard, in the department of the Gard, part of the old province of Eas Languades, a minute or two below latitude 44° north. The report referred to might be well worth the stitention of our Northern cotton-growers, both for its record of facts and of its author's intelligent inference.
