There are bartacks now nearly completed, which will accommodate 1,000 men, and additions will be made so as to furnish room for 1,500 men. Something has been said about the ventilation being deficient, but we need only reply to thia—that the barracks are not finished, and windows will be placed in them for the purpose of ventilation. A all weents, they will not be taken off the hands of the contractors until they are pronounced suitable in every particular.

Quarters have been provided for the Commissary, took possession of them this morning. He will be assisted in his duties by D. C. Kammerer, who has been appointed, Assistant Commissary. Heretofore the men have not done their own cooking, but to-day they will receive camp kettles, etc., and rations will be issued from the Commissary Department. Thus they will eighter upen the untried experience of "cooking their own victuals."

This manual, which I now present you, is entitled. "The Book of Common Prayer." It inculcates those general principles of duty which should govern us in all our relations with our fellow men, but is more especially derigned to teach us those more educabling, and, therefore, far more important truths, which illustrate our relations to God and point the way to Heaven. Mesers. Editors: I am not accustomed to give attention to anonymous squibs; but I det part so far as to reply briefly to one in your paper of yesterday, entitled "Hon. R. Mesknight and the Central Church."

I do not "approve the course of the pastor, withreference to the existing National crisis."

My love for the order of the church as one of its office bearers; and the hope that the existing difficulties would have been shortly settled, in have led me to remain thus far—and unless the position of the church shall be clear and distinct in its sympathies with the Union, I defined remain. I have waited and still wait the operation of good, sound judgment to cure these unbappy divisions.

On the new field of duty upon which you are about to enter, you will be led to feel more than you have ever heretofore felt, the need of the protecting power of Him who rules and governs all things, and without whose notice "not even a sparrow faileth to the ground."

To His care, and to His guidance and protection, I desire, in the full large of an overflowing heart, to commend each and all of you. Make it your morning and evening that to look up to Him as your surest protection. Cultivate and practice a living and abiding faith is Him—be instant in season and out of zeason in the discharge of eveny duty, whether as soldiers of the Union under the foreign stars and stripes, or as soldiers was appointed to wait upon him at the Monographia House, and conders the gorious harmer—the See the control of the section of th
