The number of federal troops available for the defence of the city cannot be less than the defence of the city cannot be less than twenty thousand. They are posted at convenient points, principally at Carrollton, the only land approach to New Orleans.

The approach is threeor four miles wide and is strongly defended, partly by fortifications built by the rebels themselves while they were making their city "impregnable." They did what they could to desiroy these fortifications when they executed New Orleans; but the works have been repaired and strengthened by General Butler; large additions have also been monds ; heavy cannon have been mounted to the number of more than fifty; while four field batteries of strillery assist in that defense of the position. Licut. Gov. Douncily.

Sr. Perra, Monday, August 25.

To the Governor of Missecota:

The force under Col. Bibley has just got out of town; the fast of them are still in sight.

Duncan Kennedy left Fort Ridgely last might, at 71/2 o'clocky on footy went up six miles, crossed the river, and walked night and day; got here about an hour age. All well in the fort; four men killed; the Indians had not attacked for two days. You may, therefore, feel relived. I do not think there is any danger of the fort falling. By to-morrow night our cavalry will reach it.

I start in a few moments. I will write you again from the fort. Yours, truly.
