THURSDAY MORNING, SEPT. 11 General McClellan

This General has now taken the field against the rebels with a magnificent army, Their Advance on Washington omposed of veteran and highly disciplined soldiers, and of new regiments, well armed weeks training, but which are made up of the finest physical and moral material the world ever saw. This army is commanded by able and experienced Generals, such as Burnside, Sigel, Summer, Franklin, Porter, Heintzelman, Hooker, Reno, McCall, and others. The army is well found in every respect, and the mon are burning to wipe out past disasters.

All nations are looking on, while our own people await events with the most breathless anxiety. The auda-cious foe, apparently in derision of his op-ponents, has thrown himself into a posi-tion of great strategical danger, and in-vites punishment for his rash aggressions. Every circumstance conspires to arouso all the latent energies of a man of enter-prise and genius. MCCLELLAN lost his reputation by his inaction before Manassas and by his failure on the Peninsula.
