It would appear that, after the withdrawal of Cox, not more than four or five thousand men remained to defend what were considered the exposed points; and of course this state of things, being well-known to the rebels, was regarded as by far too favorable to them to be suffered to continue long without being turned to their advantage. Accordingly, a column, estimated at eight or ten thousand, and supposed to be under the command of Cerro Gordo Williams, attacked one of our camps where we had only twelve-hundred men. Of course they were forced to fall back. At Charleston, on Saturday, our forces under the command of Cell tightburn had a fierce engagement like the present, to be seeking to confer the command of the conference of the whole country is fast rising to flood tide. What is the test of genuine loyalty? Is it a frank, open, unqualified avowal of opinion? A hearty support of the Government? A liberal dedication of property? Active personal exertions? Zoal—oven provoking criticism and assault? In a word, an entire and unselfish surrender of all personal interests for the good of the common cause? Then Kentucky Union man are willing to abide the test. In proportion to their numbers, they have furnished more men for the Federal armies than any other portion of our loyal population. Their lives, their families, their property in the hands of the rebels, they yet remain true to the Union. Union men of the Northern States know nothing of the risks to which Kentuckians are subjected in being Union men. The State is claimed as one of the Southern Confederacy. How much better to find a majority of her people impatient to stand shoulder to shoulder to shoulder with loyal men everywhere in putting down this most iniquitous rebellion! Let us not have added to the bitterness of our sorrow, that we are distrusted by those whom we thought our friends. It will not only put our people right before the country, but it may encourage loyal men everywhere to know a few facts well known among surrelves. Let me ear, then, that the substantial property holders, as a class, are loyal to the Union.

In the interior of the State—the wealthy counties of Fayetts, Bourbon, Clark, Woolf ford, Jessamine, &c.—two-thirds to three-fourths of the property is ewned by loyal men. A very large proportion of the slaves are held by Union men. The same may be said of other parts of the State, Of the interior I speak from personal knowledge. The Secath, with but few exceptions, who have property around them, could not have paid their debts any time these last ten years, if they had been compelled to go into liquidation.
