

Obtain the Government.
It is always the duty of every citizen to obtain the Government under which he lives, as long as that government observes the Constitution and laws. It is peculiarly the duty of citizens in a crisis like this to obtain the Government a cordial support. Even if there are many things which cannot be approved of, much which one might desire to see changed, much which one might desire to see abolished, yet one should not allow these things to prevent him from doing his duty to give the Government the support of his citizen.

Any regularly constituted legal civil Government, however badly managed, is better than any dictatorship, or irresponsible government, however well administered for the time being. There is no right for the people but in a civil government regularly constituted according to the legal forms of the constitution, as is the present administration of President Lincoln. The present rebellion against the duly constituted Government, the rebels were not willing to submit to the natural and quiet operation of the Constitution and laws, and have thus brought upon the country all the woes of the terrible rebellion which is now devastating the country. Their awful deeds should be regarded as we would regard a pestilence or a fire.

There is an apprehension in the public mind, not entirely unfounded, that there are parties in the country who would gladly see the President, clothed with dictatorial powers, or rather would see the present government superseded altogether, and a government instituted, military or otherwise, unknown to the forms of law. In other words, the objects which are before us have thus far failed to accomplish as yet. It is brought about by some other method, violent and equally in violation of the Constitution and laws, and equally as dangerous to the liberties of the people.

There is no safety for the country, for the liberties and happiness of the people, but in the support of the legally constituted government, and in steadily keeping that government independent of all military dictation. The President, Congress, and the Judiciary, must be as free to act now, unswayed, and untrammelled, by all outside influences, as at the times of the profoundest peace.

This man is an enemy to his country, and to human liberty, who systematically endeavors to undermine the confidence of the people in any branch of the government, and particularly so in Congress, the highest legislative body, the most respectable of our country liberties.

If our country comes untrammelled on this terrible conflict, with all its institutions untrammelled, and in their full vigor and authority, the great problem of the security, power, and perpetuity of a free representative government will be solved.

A Train on the Wrong Track.
A very large audience assembled at Tremont Temple, Saturday evening, to listen to the address against England, by George Francis Train, Mayor, William Brewster, and others. The address was well received, and elicited frequent outbreaks of applause. Mr. Train is a ready and fluent talker, and a very large audience will be likely to assemble to hear him, in any city he may visit, as well as in his native Boston. Still, ready and fluent talkers may exercise their gifts on foolish and unprofitable subjects. For one part, we agree with the address, and we agree with Mr. Train's speech, as far as it goes, in thinking that he and those who think with him had better cease just now their talk about England.

The New Situation of Italian Affairs.
The following extracts from a letter written by the Paris correspondent of the N. Y. Commercial, present to us a sensible picture of the opinions now prevalent, and the hopes entertained in Paris, and doubtless generally throughout Europe, respecting the present position of Italian affairs, and the opportunity given Louis Napoleon to withdraw his French janissaries from Rome, whose bayonets alone sustain the Pope on the throne of his temporal power.

Paris, Sept. 4, 1892.
The sudden termination of the Garibaldi campaign was entirely unexpected at Paris, and took every body by surprise. Such is the bias taken against the Bourbons since the battle of Solferino, a fact which amply demonstrates the importance which was accorded to the event passing in Italy. But now that the bold enterprise has failed, and a situation has been created which is a comedy, and what is the new situation created by its sudden and unexpected termination?

To answer to the first question, I should reply that there but few people here believe in the success of the Italian cause, and these few are principally found in the ranks of the clerical and the legitimate, of those in fact who are not in sympathy with the cause, and who are waiting at Rome, and Vienna for something of the kind to happen.

As regards the new position created by the abrupt and in every sense happy termination of the campaign, nearly everybody here believes that the Italian cause is hopeless, and that the triumph of the government of Turin over the party of action, known as the party of the left, is a foregone conclusion. It is true a Cabinet Council is sitting this afternoon at St. Cloud, which will discuss this question, and which may at last come to the important decision so anxiously looked for. But the public here expect so many decisions on this subject that they will hardly be too sure this time, of the result of the deliberations especially as it is known that the papal influence is still strong in the government.

The cabinet for Garibaldi has increased that diminished by the late events. However much his acts may be criticized, the party of his political, and the greatness of his character, are not called in question by any one, and wherever among men of sound mind his name is mentioned, it awakens sympathy and admiration. And if Rome be evacuated, how if any steps be taken for that event, SHEET IRON, WIRE, or any other material, SHEETS, MACHINES AND TOOLS, are required to be made for the reconstruction of the old Empire of Rome. His popularity in Italy is such that his defeat would local disturbances over the country, and nothing but a knowledge of the fact that he was loved in Turin as well as in Milan, Florence and Naples, prevented a widespread and irrepressible movement in the country.

The impression is very general in France that the termination of the Garibaldi campaign has prevented a serious misunderstanding between France and England. The sympathies of the English were too directly engaged against the French in this campaign to render the position a critical one. As it is, the English government is undoubtedly strongly pressing the French government to yield to the necessities of the position and evacuate Rome.

The Sixty Days Grace.
On the 25th day of July the President gave the rebels the sixty days notice provided for in the sixth section of the confiscation act. Only nine days more remain to expire. On the 25th day of the period of grace will have expired and the property described in section six will be forfeited to the United States by law. The following is the warning referred to in the act:
