Pittsburgh Gazette.

FRIDAY MORNING, SEPT. 19.

The Situation.

The great battle of Sunday, which opened the series of the late battles in Maryland, is the only one of which we have got any further details than our telegraphic correspondence supplied. These details we have presented in as condensed a form as possible, that our space may be available for the later news by telegraph, relating to the still more exciting events of Tuesday and Wednesday.

It would appear that on these days the rebel army was so vigorously pressed towards the Potomac that dispersion, surrender, or annihilation, could alone be the issues they had to contemplate, unless JACKSON could re-cross the river above, and by turning the flank of McCLELLAN'S army deliver his friends from their perilous position.

Here was our army every way superior to theirs, driving them along mountain ridges and down the intervening valleys to a river, which, if to be crossed under the plunging fire of batteries on the heights, would become a river of death, and run red with the blood of thousands, ere an hour. JACKSON, it would appear, was not found wanting in this extremity—and with his accustomed celerity of movement we hear of him crossing at Shepherd's Ferry and appearing on the right flank of our army, now engaged with that of LEE in one of the fiercest conflicts of the war. An enemy like JACKSON on his flank would demand all the attention General McCLELLAN could bestow in that quarter; and if his reserves were in such a position that they could be at once brought up, and a new front formed,—all might go well, though not so well as if LEE and JACKSON could have been separately dealt with.

By the dispatches already received it will be seen that the work goes bravely on, and, as if the "stars in their courses" were ready to fight on our side at last, we hear that the Potomac is rising, so that we would hardly be extravagant, even if we anticipated in the coming dispatches, within a day or two, to read that the rebel army, lately so formidable in its attitude of invasion, had been utterly routed and destroyed, or only saved from that fate by surrender.

Meeting of Governors.

We have met with suggestions in various quarters, for some time past, that the Governors of the loyal States should meet, and take such steps as the times demand, to urge on the Government the necessity of at once coming up with the people, who have made such progress, in almost every question connected with the conduct and policy of the war, and especially the confiscation and slavery question, as to have left the Government far behind them. Indeed, the people, from the first outbreak of the rebellion, but more especially within the past few months, have been very far ahead of the Government, on this and almost every other vital and practical question affecting the issue now before us all—and they are now ripe and ready, as events themselves are, for a policy that shall not only strike down the deadly poisonous fruit which treason has nurtured and ripened, but which will also, with one and the same continuous blow, strike down to the bitter roots itself, and eradicate the origin of this treason and rebellion from our Republican system of Government, and from our country, forever.

If a meeting of the Governors is the most direct and practical, and, at the same time, the most dignified and respectful method that can be devised of apprising the Government at Washington of the real present state of opinion throughout the North—let there be a frequens conventus Gubernatorum, on the earliest day, and in the most convenient place, that can be agreed upon. Such a proposition can be cordially seconded by any loyal man, and may commend itself to the lovers of good order, and the friends of the Administration, even if some of the latter, believing and hoping all things, are willing to trust that all things are even now working together for good, and that the end will be the same, and all right, without interference with the apparently slow, but strictly arranged and rigidly followed programme of the Government.

A meeting of the Governors of the loyal States, now that Congress is not in session, would really be such a representative body as must be regarded, beyond any other assemblage of public men, as entitled to address the general government on behalf of the country—to speak on behalf of the people of the North to the Administration at Washington in this important crisis of national affairs.

—A telegram, given in another column, will show that the project of a meeting of the Governors is well under way—Governors CURTIN, of Pennsylvania, TOD, of Ohio, and PIERPONT, of Virginia, having taken the initiative, and fixed on Altoona, Pa., as the place, and the 24th instant, as the time, for the meeting.

A PROMINENT NORTH-WESTERN STATESMAN waited on the President yesterday to lay before him a statement of the fearful atrocities committed by the Indians. Mr. Lincoln listened to the sad recital with his wounted attention, and at its conclusion remarked, earnestly: "Is God against us?" "No," Mr. President, was the reply, "God is not against us, but a majority of the people, I fear, begin to think that the Administration is against them. They have cheerfully contributed their sons and their money, meeting every requisition, submitting to every requirement, and making no complaints. But their implicit confidence in the Administration is giving way to doubt and dissatisfaction." I mention this incident to show the sentiment of the North-west, and also to show that Mr. Lincoln knows what it is.—Wash. Cor. N. Y. Post.

GOV. YATES has issued a stirring proclamation, calling out two hundred companies of infantry, averaging two to a county, to be organized into regiments under the militia law. Each company, besides the usual officers, will have no less than sixty-four, or more than eighty-two privates. Agents have been sent to purchase arms for twenty regiments, which, as soon as received, will be issued to regiments prepared to receive them. As soon as they are organized, camps of instruction and rendezvous will be established for each regiment, and they will be first liable to be called into service by the government, in pursuance of law, as soon as organized. Each county will be allowed to furnish one company in case it is organized by the 25th.

THE United States Surgeon General, in response to several urgent inquiries from Gov. Yates, of Illinois, has refused to receive homeopathic physicians in the army.

LEADING Democrats of Illinois are about to call a convention in opposition to the Baptist Convention held in Springfield on the 10th instant.

The Rebels in Maryland.

A correspondent of the Baltimore American writes from Chambersburg, on the 13th:

On Friday night and Saturday morning of last week news reached Hagerstown of the crossing of the rebels into Maryland, as well as the evacuation of Frederick city by the Federal troops. The news created considerable excitement and a meeting was called by the Mayor and Town Council on Saturday at two o'clock for the purpose of forming a military organization to resist any rebel raid from that direction, as some of the Hagerstown rebels had predicted a dash from the rebel cavalry, a few of whom were natives of our town and county. Some sixty names were enrolled to meet that night to get arms, but news came that the rebels were advancing in force, and then commenced a panic among the citizens, the causes of which were substantially as follows:

Major Scott, commanding the 20th Pennsylvania Regiment, with about three hundred and fifty men, on whom we relied, in connection with ourselves, for protection, had thrown out his pickets beyond Funkstown, two miles on the Frederick road. News came in through this source that the rebels were advancing in force. By order of the Major the train was fired up, the army stores loaded, and everything prepared by the gallant Major to "skedaddle." About 10 o'clock the pickets were reported driven in, the long roll beat, and the gallant Major started his wagon train and turned the backs of his brave boys, against their will, on the supposed enemy. The result of this movement created tremendous excitement among the Union people. About 11 o'clock the train started for Chambersburg, with not less than one hundred Union men on board. Others left by private conveyance and on foot. The banks had sent off their deposits; merchants were trying to dispose of their goods, and confusion soon became confounded," whilst there was not an enemy within twenty miles of the town.

From this time until Thursday morning at ten o'clock much alarm and uneasiness was experienced. At that time Col. Brien, of the 1st Virginia Cavalry, dashed into the town and seized the telegraph office, but the operator and his machine had passed out the back door a few minutes in advance. He also seized the railroad depot, but there were no cars there; he visited the Commissioner's office, and he had gone with the books; also the Deputy Marshal's house and he had gone also; the jail and what they wanted had gone. They also visited several other places, but found nothing and nobody. If they intended arresting Union men they soon found there were none left to arrest, and hence the order none should be arrested.

The possession of Hagerstown by the Rebels in overpowering numbers, with a gloomy prospect ahead for the Union men, gloriously established the loyalty of her citizens, and satisfied us that nine out of every ten Union men will leave their homes, property and business before they consent to live under rule. The County Clerk, Sheriff, Collector, Register, the publishers of the Herald, and, in fact, all the prominent Union men "skedaddled," except two or three, and one of these, who has five Union offices distributed in his family, was heard cursing the runaway cowards in a private alley to a miserable secessionist.

The rebels on their first appearance behaved well. Their cavalry were in fair condition. Many of them hunted up the town hen roosts as well as hen roosts in the country, so that on Friday morning they breakfasted on chicken, and through the day numbers of them were taken for chicken peddlers and hucksters. Queer sights were presented outside of the town. On the roads numbers could be seen setting along the road-side picking vermin off of each other. Bare-headed, bootless, shoeless and ragged, they presented a sickening appearance, so much so that their real friends were ashamed to look at them. During Thursday the rebel stores of the town did a big trade, taking in a large lot of rebel scrip. The Union stores refused to sell for any other than good money, but always pointed them to their friends, hence the rebels suffered most. On Friday morning every store in the town was closed. The rebel stores had evidently done enough of business to keep closed for a week. At noon it was noised around that the rebels intended to help themselves, but I had no information later than Friday night as to what they did do. The Union people of the town refuse to hold any intercourse with them. Hugh Logan, a man who took the oath of allegiance less than one month ago, has opened a recruiting office. As far as I can understand he has about six recruits, all of whom, like their officer, had taken the oath. Their success in recruiting will be limited to not over ten men, all told.

Incidents of the Maryland Campaign.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer, writing from Chambersburg, Pa., narrates many interesting incidents. A deserter from Jackson's body-guard escaped to that place on Friday night. It was Jackson's purpose, he stated, to invade Pennsylvania. The cold reception given by the Marylanders greatly disappointed the rebels, who expected fifty thousand recruits, and did not get five hundred. More than that number of their own soldiers deserted, and their negro servants generally ran away.

A detachment of cavalry from Harper's Ferry rode up to Williamsport and captured seventy-four prisoners, having in charge a train of fifty wagons laden with spoil. Two or three of the prisoners were Marylanders, who had taken the oath of allegiance, and another was no less a person than Cleggett Fitzhugh, the nephew of the wife of Gerrit Smith, the celebrated radical abolitionist. Fitzhugh had just sent his aunt and her children North for safety, prior to joining the rebels.

CLEGGETT FITZHUGH.

Fitzhugh has been engaged in business for Holker Hughes, an extensive ironmonger of Franklin county, near the Maryland line, in a township called Quincy.—He served as his head clerk. He acquired notoriety as the man who arrested (in company with Daniel Logan, a celebrated negro catcher) John E. Cook, the co-partner and confrere of John Brown. Cook had escaped, and, taking the mountainous ranges, had kept them until he had gotten within the lines of this State. Fitzhugh met him when Cook, exhausted for want of food, ventured down from the mountains to seek it. Meeting Fitzhugh, he gave him the Masonic sign, which the latter returned.

Cook at once entered into conversation, and told him who he was, and his condition, asking for relief. Fitzhugh told him to come with him. Logan, at a given sign from Fitzhugh, seized Cook from behind, and being a powerful man, he held Cook fast. The latter, a very nervous, active man, who had hunted, scouted and fought Missouri border ruffians in Kansas, resisted desperately; and would have eluded even Logan's grasp had not Fitzhugh interfered with them. The force of two athletic men was too great for Cook, and he was brought hither, taken to jail, remanded by Governor Packer to Virginia, and hung.

A REMARKABLE PREDICTION.

Logan is said to have often told, as a good joke, among his companions, in boon moments, that Cook had said to him and Fitzhugh that he knew he would die, but that they would end their days on the scaffold. This seems likely to become true. Fitzhugh is now incarcerated, and is not a prisoner of war. Logan is now under arrest, and, if justice be done, will be retained and tried, if not for treason, most probably for high crimes and misdemeanors. Cook may have prophesied truly.

MORE WAGONS.

The excitement of the arrival of the seventy-four men taken in arms had scarcely subsided when the forty-two wagons belonging to Longstreet's division, containing ammunition of the most necessary character, came in. The streets were again lined. The teams made a most sorry appearance. The drivers were either darkies or rough looking specimens of southern chivalry. A number of the wagons were marked "U. S.," and had evidently been taken from our army. One of them had on the words, "First New Hampshire Battery."

The excitement, raised to the comparative degree, reached the superlative when the gallant First Maryland Cavalry rode in, guarding forty-three other prisoners. The total numbers of prisoners therefore taken is one hundred and twenty, including forty contrabands.
