THE BATTLE OF ANTIETAM.

Most Interesting Details.

No battle since the war began has so nearly approached the character of one of the regular old-world battles of yore, as that of Wednesday last. In every previous engagement, the general in command of the Federal forces, and the general in command of the Confederate forces, were separated by a wide interval, and the battle was fought on a narrow front, and the result was determined by the skill of the general in command of the Federal forces, and the skill of the general in command of the Confederate forces.

The Rebel Invasion of Maryland.

The Rebel Invasion of Maryland—The Plan, and the Men who are carrying it out. A Washington correspondent of the New York Times, writes: Some facts in connection with the operations in Maryland have just come to our knowledge, which may prove of interest to our readers. It is now generally understood that the rebel army, under the command of General Lee, is now in the possession of the State of Maryland, and is preparing to march on to Washington.

MONDAY'S MOVEMENTS.

The indications at 9 o'clock on Sunday evening, after the battle was fairly over, were that the next day would be one of fierce and decisive battles. We know we were on the heels of the rebels, and were likely to meet them in a battle which would be likely to result in a decisive victory for the Federal forces.

THE REBEL ATTACK.

In another moment, a rebel battle-line appears on the brow of the ridge above us, and the rebels are seen to be moving forward. The rebels are now in the possession of the ridge, and are preparing to march on to Washington.

THE REBELS' ADVANCE.

The rebels are now in the possession of the ridge, and are preparing to march on to Washington. The rebels are now in the possession of the ridge, and are preparing to march on to Washington.
